Big rise in non-religious funeral services reported

SPECIAL REPORT by Chris Murphy

FINAL farewells are increasingly becoming non-religious, with funeral directors across the county reporting a sharp rise in humanist services.

In what has already been a turbulent week for the Church of England, the findings of our special report will put increasing weight on the shoulders of incoming Archbishop of Canterbury Dr Justin Welby.

In addition to dwindling congregations, it appears that while religious funerals still comfortably dominate, there is mounting evidence the perceived shift to a more secular society is being reflected by the manner in which memorial services are being conducted.

'Shift in attitude' has led to a rise in humanist funerals

A spokesman for Doves funeral services, which has nine offices around Kent, including Maidstone, Ashford, and Swanley, said: "About one in three of our services are now non-religious.

"It has gone up quite dramatically in the past year or so."

Humanist services have doubled across the UK in the last five years.

They have no references to the afterlife or any deity. Instead, whoever takes the service celebrates the life of the departed and reflects on what they meant to their friends and family.

Andrew Copson is spokesman for the British Humanist Association.

He explained: "Those we attend have doubled in the UK over the past five years to around 10,000 per annum now. And this number is set to increase dramatically as the demographic of the country changes.

"More young people are not religious and as they grow older they will most likely opt for a funeral that doesn't mention religion, so numbers will naturally increase."

Put in context, 493,242 people died in the UK in 2010.

The association said it is not anti-religious and never 'preaches' anti-God messages. It promotes itself as an organisation people can turn to for alternative ceremonies, including weddings.

The spokesman added: "Most services in Kent and the rest of Britain are held in crematoria which are not religious places anyway. Woodland burials are also getting more popular."

The BHA supplies what they call celebrants, which cost up to £180, to carry out either a funeral or memorial service. The fee is generally included in the overall cost of the funeral, payable to the funeral director.

The Co-operative, which has 32 directors across Kent, said: "Our research into funeral customs shows humanist ceremonies are increasing in number and now account for more than one in 10 funerals.

CHANGE: People are increasingly choosing to celebrate life, rather than mourn loss

"There has been a significant shift in attitude to funerals across the UK with the emphasis on celebrating life rather than mourning a loss, and as people seek to personalise their loved one's send-off they are choosing to organise a ceremony in keeping with that person's life and beliefs, and the rise in contemporary funerals and humanist ceremonies accounts for this."

John Weir, who runs John Weir Funeral Directors in Gillingham, Chatham, Rainham and Parkwood, adds: "We have seen approximately a 12 per cent increase in all non-religious funerals in the past year alone."

But the Church of England does not see this increase as a threat to traditional services.

In just the Canterbury diocese, which also covers Maidstone, Sheppey, Thanet, and Romney, the figures for cremations led by a Church of England minister, have remained stable at an average of 2,613 over 11 years from 2000 to 2010. Church funerals in the same period were also almost static with an average of 1,393.

The Venerable John Barton was an arch-deacon in Kent, and still lives in Canterbury. He is currently examining funeral services for the Church of England, meeting clergy around the country and gauging opinions.

He said: "I don't think the churches will soon be empty. How many pubs are closing in the UK and how many churches?"

He said the Church is still involved in around 90 per cent of funerals, which is a clear majority, and added: "We are here for everyone.

"When it comes to funerals there will be people who say they don't want God mentioned. I have been hearing from clergy who have spoken with mourners who didn't have a religious funeral say they were disappointed with the decision afterwards."

TESTING TIMES

BISHOP of Durham Dr Justin Welby was under no illusions that becoming the next Archbishop of Canterbury was going to be a stroll in the park.

But any hopes of a honeymoon period of calm as he takes over from outgoing Dr Rowan Williams next month disappeared at the General Synod this week.

By rejecting plans for women bishops, the Church found itself at the centre of derision and further years of damaging debate.

Robin Gill is professor of applied theology at the University of Kent.

He believes Dr Welby will need to exercise all his skills to reconcile the two sides. He said: "Many will be deeply disappointed about the failure of the General Synod to agree to proceed with the ordination of women as bishops.

"All but two of the diocese were in favour, as were almost all of the bishops and three-quarters of the clergy on the General Synod.

"Unfortunately the laity members ['ordinary' churchgoers represented in the government of the Church] fell a few votes short of the two-thirds in favour required. In other words, every group had a majority agreeing – in both churches and the population at large – for women to be bishops, yet the vote was still lost.

"A significant section of the laity on the General Synod is frankly out of step with others on this issue. That was also the case 20 years ago when the General Synod narrowly voted for women to be priests. It was the lay members who were most hesitant. To his credit, Archbishop George Carey detected this and managed to persuade some of his fellow evangelicals to drop their opposition. Without this the vote would have been lost. That did not happen this time around.

"I hope a way will be found to bring this back to the General Synod soon and that the new archbishop will be able to use his skills in reconciliation to change hearts. The Church of England will be deeply harmed if it cannot make this long-overdue change."

Widow is set to coin it in after rare find could fetch £120,000

By Chrissie Daniels
chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

RARE FIND: The Queen Anne Vigo five guineas was minted in 1703 with gold captured from Spanish galleons

WHEN a widow discovered an old coin of her late husband's in a chest of drawers, she could not have dreamed of what it was worth.

But when she took it, along with two silver coins, to be valued by a local auctioneer, it became apparent she had in her possession something of huge interest.

And next month it goes under the auctioneer's hammer – with an estimated value of up to £120,000.

The finder, who wishes to remain anonymous, had taken the coins to auctioneers Gorringes in Tunbridge Wells.

Upon inspection, staff member Leslie Gillham realised the gold coin was in fact one of the most collectable and expensive pieces in history – a Queen Anne Vigo five guineas.

The coin dates back to 1703 – when Queen Anne began her reign – and was made with gold captured from Spanish galleons at the Battle of Vigo Bay.

It is believed that less than 20 such coins are around today, with 15 of them in private ownership. Only six have been offered for sale in the UK in the past 50 years.

Mr Gillham said he was left speechless when he realised the importance of the discovery.

He said: "When the lady came in I was not wonderfully enthusiastic as most aren't worth anything.

"She gave me two silver crowns and I thought 'shame you haven't got any gold coins'. Then she produced the five guinea piece which made my eyes nearly pop out of my head. My first thought was it must be a fake."

But after a second opinion, the coin, which is in 'very fine condition', was deemed genuine and valued at £80,000-£120,000.

Mr Gillham said: "The lady was very cool. The coins were extremely rare to start with. They do not know how many were made exactly."

Mr Gillham, who is an auctioneer, said there has been a lot of interest in the coin, especially from America.

He said the highest price one has sold for is £150,000 and that the mystery woman's coin has been described as in similar condition to one that sold for £130,000.

Gorringes will auction the coin in their East Sussex saleroom in Lewes on December 6.

CELEBRATING A GREAT VICTORY

MASTER: Sir Isaac Newton

On October 12, 1702, a powerful Anglo-Dutch fleet under the command of Admiral Sir George Rooke was returning from a failed attempt to capture Cadiz, when it engaged with and destroyed a Franco-Spanish bullion fleet sheltering in Vigo Bay on the north eastern coast of Spain.

Such was the overwhelming success of the action that, despite the fact the Spanish had already offloaded most of the treasure, it served as a major propaganda victory, distracting public attention from the previous disastrous assault on Cadiz.

Transported with great pageantry to the Royal Mint was just 7lb 8oz of the plundered gold along with 4,500lb of silver. It was received by Sir Isaac Newton, then Master of the Mint.

A royal warrant was issued causing the bullion to be coined and the word 'VIGO' to be inserted under Queen Anne's bust in order to 'continue to posterity the remembrance of that glorious action'.

MISSING

Website's clues to mystery dead

A NATIONAL website containing details of 24 unsolved Kent mystery death cases has gone live in a bid to spark new information to identify victims.

The Missing Persons Bureau says the site is the first in the UK dedicated to unidentified people - both dead and alive.

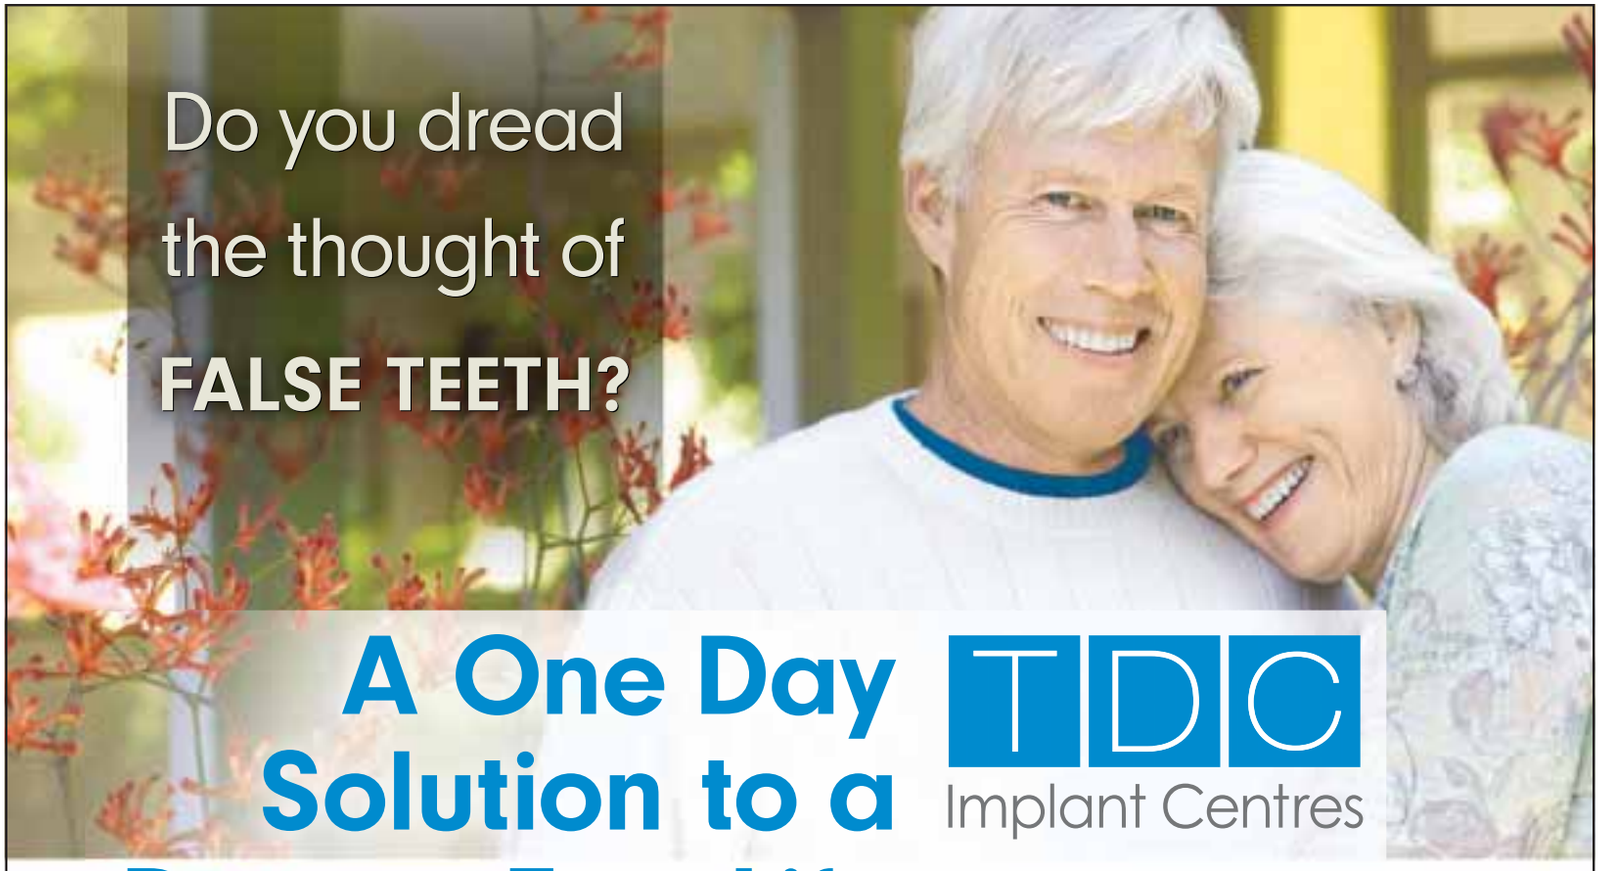

The Kent cases date between 1971 and 2002. The most historic involves a man aged between 30 and 50 with unknown ethnicity who was washed ashore at Lydd-on-Sea on October 5, 1971.

Just two cases involve women. One was a white European woman aged between 45 and 50, found in Folkestone Harbour on January 3, 1979. She'd been dead just a few hours, but despite appeals, was never identified.

And a woman with an ovarian cyst was found at the bottom of Dover cliffs in August 2000.

A male, in his early 60s, was recovered from the sea at Dover in October 1980, and others were found on railway lines, roadsides, and other public places. A spokesman for the site said: "It will bring closure to families and friends if an individual is identified." The site's address is www.missingpersons.police.uk.

MAN IN THE MIDDLE: KCCC's chief exec Jamie Clifford sent a letter to non-playing staff explaining the current economic problems the club is now facing

Storm clouds looming over cricket club as staff warned of redundancies

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

STAFF at Kent County Cricket Club have been told they may face the axe as the cash-strapped club are bracing themselves for "very disappointing" financial figures for the year.

The news will come as a surprise to supporters who thought the club was turning a corner after extensive redevelopment of its Canterbury headquarters – a multi-million pound move designed to turn it into a year-round business.

But the economic situation has hit it hard, along with a wet summer which washed out many of its key money-making matches.

The club's chief executive Jamie Clifford admitted a thorough review of its business could "unfortunately lead to a potential redundancy situation".

In a letter to staff, Mr Clifford said: "This has been an extremely tough year for the club and the financial results for 2011-12 are likely to be very disappointing. The combination of poor weather this summer and the difficult economic climate has knocked us off course.

"This is hugely frustrating because I believe that we are doing many things right; the ground redevelopment, recent sponsorship successes and improved playing performance have all been very encouraging.

"Ultimately though, the business cannot sustain annual losses and as such, we need to review how we are operating."

Now under way, that review will look at "all potential cost-saving measures" which will include "staff resourcing levels".

Mr Clifford added: "It's a cost saving process; you can do that in many ways.

"If I said we were reducing the amount of grass and fertiliser we ordered that could be one option. We are at the earliest stage in the process.

"My overriding priority is to consider the welfare of the staff. That's why they have had a letter as soon as any process that involves them starts."

Staff have been invited to offer up alternatives in a bid to reduce the pressure on the wage bill.

It is not the first time the club has been forced to take such action.

There were redundancies in both 2009 and 2010, as the club sought to balance its books in the face of a squeeze on spending.

However, last year it recorded an operating profit of £188,000, which was in stark contrast to the loss of £595,000 the previous year.

Mr Clifford added: "I'm very positive about where we are now compared to where we were nearly three years ago, which was no ground redevelopment, a side that had just been relegated and a club at a very low ebb.

"We were losing serious money but now we're moving in the right direction."

ON A STICKY WICKET...

- Rain ruins Tunbridge Wells Cricket Week in June – costing the club an estimated £50,000 alone.
- The poor weather and competition from the Olympics hits attendances.
- The club narrowly miss out on a money-spinning Twenty20 Cup quarter-final place.
- Promotion to Division One is missed by a whisker – finishing one place off the promotion spots.
- Recession puts hopes of a hotel at the St Lawrence on ice. It was considered a key money-maker.

ROB MAKES KEY MOVE

ROB Key confirmed he was stepping down as captain this week – and will be replaced by England international James Tredwell.

Key, 33, had been skipper for seven years, after taking over in 2005 from Dave Fulton.

He said he felt "worn out" after his time in charge, and had decided it was time to hand over the leadership.

He said: "At the end of the summer I was tired and had had enough really. I wanted to concentrate on my own game and myself."

For full details and interview with both the out-going and new captain, turn to our sports pages.

HEALTH

Pensioner wins support in row over loud music in gym

A PENSIONER who cut up his gym membership in a protest at the loud music being played during his early morning work-outs, has won the backing of Age UK.

David Richer, 75, was left fuming by the noisy music pumped into the gym at the Marsh Academy Leisure Centre in Romney Marsh.

He was so incensed he ended his £30-a-month membership and swapped his two-hour 7am workout for his push bike. And his stance was followed by other OAPs, who followed him out the door.

Age UK, which offers support services for the elderly, said Mr Richer was right to make a stand.

Paul Owen, chief executive officer for the Faversham branch, said: "I admire the pensioners for standing up for their rights. There needs to be a compromise to suit all tastes."

The gym is part of the local school and was built in 1982, partly funded by Sport England.

Keith Norman, director of finance and resources at the Marsh Academy, said: "We are very sorry that Mr Richer has decided to leave. The majority of people do prefer to have music playing – it's not desperately loud in our opinion.

"We have 500 members at the gym and we are sorry Mr Richer feels the way he does.

"The music played is fairly easy listening stuff. It's not heavy metal stuff."

Manager Jason Mahoney added: "We do have people who want us to play it louder, and some want it quieter. We can't please all the people all the time."

PCC Barnes promises personal touch as link between us and police

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

"EVERY family and every community; their problems are my problems" – that's the message from Kent's new Police and Crime Commissioner, Ann Barnes.

The former teacher, who chaired the Kent Police Authority for six years, stormed to victory in the first-ever PCC election last week, beating off rivals with a huge 45.9 per cent of the vote in the first count.

Going head-to-head with Conservative rival Craig Mackinlay in the second count, the independent candidate secured a massive 65.5 per cent.

Speaking to KoS in the week she was sworn into the office, she said this was a new beginning, not just for her, but for people in Kent.

"For the first time there will be a person people can go to with their problems in policing; one person to be the link to the force," she said.

"My intentions are quite clear; every family and every community – their problems are my problems. So often people who are in public service positions sit at the top of the hierarchy, away from the public – I will be out there in the community.

"Kent is going to have the most accessible PCC in the country. I will be that first link for people in Kent.

"There's a lot to do. I haven't made sweeping promises I won't keep – we see that all the time in politics. I made specific promises in response to genuine needs in Kent."

She admitted times were tough financially, with Kent Police having to make huge savings amounting to £50 million over four years, which has resulted in officer and civilian job losses.

"Savings have already been delivered in Kent Police, but what does worry me is that this government may cut police funding more," said Mrs Barnes.

"I will fight that to the bitter end to ensure visible community policing in Kent."

Mrs Barnes, from Lyminge near Folkestone, replaces the Kent Police Authority. She is responsible for governing the local police force and holding the Chief Constable to account for the performance of Kent Police.

She has the power to hire and fire the Chief Constable, draw up and publish a police and crime plan, set the policing priorities and detail how and where money is spent.

Chief Constable Ian Learmonth remains responsible for operational matters, but Mrs Barnes holds the force to account and is "the voice of the people".

She will pick up an £85,000 salary and will be up for re-election in May 2014, when the next PCC poll will be held to coincide with local council elections.

Her activities will be scrutinised by the Police and Crime Panel, made up of councillors from all the districts in Kent and a number of independent members.

Mrs Barnes said: "Policing is a very complex world. Kent Police has a budget of £270m – that's a lot of money, but setting the budget and the policing plan is tricky to do.

"Somebody coming into this with no experience would have struggled; they would have had to have spent time having to learn how to do this.

"I don't, I'm used to doing it, I've got that under my belt already so I can push on and use this time wisely, start the hard work in delivering my promises."

Mrs Barnes said she will work to make policing accessible.

"I will map the places and times when people can access police, so people in every ward know when and where they can speak to their local PCSO and police officers.

"I will set up local policing boards to allow the public to have more say in the different areas of Kent. This county has three diverse areas; west Kent is different to north Kent, for example, and they are different to south Kent.

"People who sit on these local boards would come from those areas.

"I'm also setting up a fleet of 'mini-mobiles' to travel to rural areas and deal with policing issues there. We have communities which are quite isolated."

Mrs Barnes said the process for taking on a youth police and crime commissioner – one of her pledges before the election – would soon start.

"I want them to be the face of Kent's young people and the link between young people and the police. They will bridge the gap," she said.

"I'm quite open-minded about who it could be; it could be a school leaver, a university graduate or someone who doesn't have a job.

"Young people commit crime, but young people are also victims of crime."

She said she will support victims by giving them the means to see progress in police investigations.

Spoilt ballot papers sign of voters' anger

FIGURES for last week's Police and Crime Commissioner poll have revealed thousands of people spoiled their ballot papers.

In the first count of the supplementary vote system, some 3,931 voters spoiled their papers, making them void by either marking them incorrectly or failing to cast a vote altogether.

More than 6,440 voters, failed to choose a preference in the second choice option.

While spoiled papers are not unusual in an election, PCC Ann Barnes said some of these spoiled papers were in protest.

"I get cross when I hear people talking about apathy in these elections. It wasn't apathy, it was anger and that was seen in the number of spoiled ballots," she said.

"People wanted to vote, but they didn't know about the elections; they didn't know much about the role; it was held in November when elections aren't usually held. People damaged their votes in anger.

"This was supposed to an important election, but did you ever hear the Prime Minister talking about it?"

She added: "The people spoke; they did not want a political party. I felt humbled by the confidence people have shown in me."

A measly 16.3 per cent of the Kent electorate – just 208,782 of 1.2 million eligible to vote – turned out to the polls last week.

WINNING WAYS: Ann Barnes during last week's PCC election count where she stormed to victory and became the county's first Police and Crime Commissioner

SPIRITUALISM

Mum reveals how dead son writes her letters from beyond the grave

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

WHEN Sally Woodmansee's son was tragically killed in a car crash two years ago she, like anyone to suffer bereavement, thought it was the last she would ever see or hear from her beloved boy.

But in what is thought to be an extraordinary spiritual phenomenon, the 52-year-old claims her dead son Tony is communicating with her from beyond the grave – writing her letters every day.

Mum-of-five Mrs Woodmansee, from Herne Bay, says Tony, who was just 20 when he died, "speaks" to her through what is known as "automatic spiritual writing".

Every morning at 6am, she sits in a darkened room with a notepad and pen. Her arm starts to glide, writing page after page of thoughtful script.

The hairdresser insists she has no control over her arm and that, instead, Tony is in control, sending her messages from the afterlife.

"I'd never been spiritual before and I can understand if people are sceptical. It's so surreal," she said.

"There was no explanation when it started happening. My arm made a creaking, grinding noise and I thought it was a trapped nerve. I'd look down and my arm would be hovering. But the overwhelming sense of calm I felt when it happened – all the turmoil disappeared – I couldn't explain it."

It started happening when she arrived back from hospital after Tony passed away.

The former Herne Bay High pupil suffered serious head injuries in a car crash on the A291 Canterbury Road on October 28, 2010, in which he was a passenger.

According to the family, unusual things started to happen almost immediately after his death.

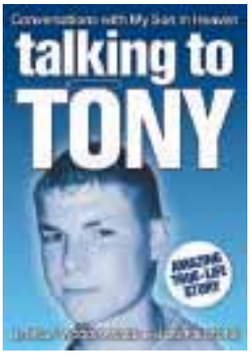

At his funeral, the congregation was left baffled by strange events.

"The CD kept skipping back to just two of the songs," said Mrs Woodmansee. "Then the vicar kept stopping through her readings – it would take her minutes to start up again.

"I looked over at my eldest son and he was sniggering, but I thought it was nerves. Oliver later told me that as he'd walked into the funeral he'd said to Tony that if he was there and okay, to send a message by messing with the music or making the vicar forget her words. It was him sending a message, but it took me a while to accept it was really happening."

MOTHER: Sally Woodmansee

It wasn't until two of Tony's friends went to see a medium that Mrs Woodmansee was convinced her dead son was trying to get in touch with her.

"Two girls had booked to see a medium before Tony passed and it fell on the day of the funeral," she said. "The medium said a young man called Tony who had died in a car crash had come through and had done something strange – he had sprinkled Oxo cubes on her head. I knew straight away it was him.

"Tony had Oxo cubes in everything. The first time I went shopping after he passed I was unpacking food and a box of Oxo cubes fell off the shelf."

When things started to happen every day, Mrs Woodmansee decided to visit the medium herself, convinced her son was trying to make contact.

"When I got there she said she was glad I had come; Tony had been hassling her all the time. There were things she said about him she just couldn't have known. Only I knew those things.

"I decided to tell her about my arm, which is when she explained automatic spiritual writing. She said Tony wanted me to ask him a question. I needed to sit in a dark room with a notepad and pen."

So the next morning that's what Mrs Woodmansee did.

"It took about seven or eight minutes before anything happened, but then my arm started to move. It felt like I was making huge movements and afterwards I felt drained."

When she looked at the pad, a faint outline of the word 'Tony' had been written.

Amazed, she did the same thing every morning and now has 12 A4 notebooks packed with profound statements 'from her son' as well as loving messages.

Mrs Woodmansee says she doesn't know what has been written until she reads it afterwards.

Amazingly, she also says she can often sit for an hour with her arm held up and writing – something most people would struggle with.

Mrs Woodmansee has co-written an ebook called Talking to Tony with former national journalist Laurie Stone, from Blean, telling her incredible story. In just one week, more than 1,000 copies have been sold.

"I would never want to upset anyone but I have been overwhelmed by the support," she said. "It gives some understanding as to what happens.

"For me, I know my fate, I know I will see Tony again and that gives me strength. Nothing makes the pain of losing a child any easier, but this provides some understanding of where he is. He tells me he has the best of both worlds."

■ Talking to Tony is available from Amazon for the Kindle and other devices using the Kindle App. It is priced at £5.14.

SPIRITUAL WRITING

MEDIUMS believe this is a way of communicating with the spirit world using a pen and paper.

According to Psychic Victoria, from Ashford, it involves allowing the spirit to flow through a person directly to their hand in order to guide and create words.

She said: "Spirits do not enter inside your physical body, but will come very close to you. Their hand will come into contact with yours and then write through your hand that is holding the pen.

"The words that are written will not be of your own thoughts, and the feeling that accompanies this will be unmistakable."

Tony writes...

"POSITIVITY and hope create strength. People are getting weak by their own doing. It really is time for change. It is this simple.

Lose the hate and find the love. Feelings don't disappear as if by magic — if there were issues and troubles with anyone before, they mellow and become far less important.

We must realise that a lot of troubles and worries aren't half as serious or necessary as we make them out to be. It is magnified by negativity.

It becomes far easier to resolve differences once you are here. There aren't added pressures here, so we can see everything more clearly."

QUARRY

Ancient woodland finds itself at the heart of 'defining' case, amid plans for a quarry

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

ANXIOUS campaigners vying to protect ancient woodland from being dug up to make way for a ragstone quarry are to step up their fight this week as a much-anticipated public inquiry begins.

Conservation experts from the Woodland Trust and Kent Wildlife Trust will give evidence against the plans for Oaken Wood in Maidstone.

Quarrying firm Gallagher Group submitted a proposal in 2010 to Kent County Council to extend the existing Hermitage Quarry onto the woodland site.

More than 1,000 people objected, but the application was granted in May 2011.

The Woodland Trust joined forces with Kent Wildlife Trust to request the matter be addressed by the Secretary of State and it was called in for further scrutiny at a public inquiry.

This inquiry will be held at Oakwood House Hotel in Maidstone and is expected to last 12 days.

Campaigners warn the development would destroy ancient woodland containing sweet chestnut coppice – a historically valuable crop – as well as a diverse range of plants and rare species, including bats, dormice and reptiles.

Protestors say the outcome is likely to define the level of protection given to ancient woods in all future planning decisions across England.

They stress that if Oaken Wood is lost to the quarry extension, a "dangerous" precedent could be set for mineral extraction proposals in other ancient woodland. The UK has just two per cent of such woodland left.

Woodland Trust's head of campaigning, Nikki Williams, said Oaken Wood is the biggest test for the future of ancient woodland since the National Planning Policy Framework was launched.

"We are confident that the benefits of the mineral extraction at Oaken Wood do not outweigh the loss of this irreplaceable ancient woodland and look forward to defending this precious wildlife habitat for generations to come," she said.

But Nick Yandle, chief executive of Gallagher Group, said extending the quarry would ensure the future of Kent's beloved ancient buildings.

"This application is good for Kent, good for local jobs and, with time, will see the doubling of the woodland footprint, from 33 hectares to 66 hectares, with indigenous species such as oak," he said. "The future well-being of some of the country's best-loved ancient buildings depend on this application being approved.

"Years of planning to identify suitable sites combined with deployment of the best tried-and-tested techniques will ensure that the westerly extension of Hermitage Quarry is conducted to the highest possible ecological standards."

The inquiry starts at 10am on Tuesday.

Conservation experts will give evidence. A full day has been set aside on December 14, for community groups and individuals to take part.

PERSONAL INJURY CLAIMS LTD

NOTHING TO PAY US AT ANY STAGE

By Chrissie Daniels

LOOKING for a stocking filler for the politically motivated? Then a gift set containing all you need to carry out a citizen's arrest on former Prime Minister Tony Blair hits the shelves next month.

The Arrest Tony Blair DIY kit comes complete with hand-cuffs, protective gloves and instructions, and is the latest product from a firm in Margate.

The packaging tells buyers to "grab him, cuff him, keep him".

Those behind the product – which goes on sale for £10 from Saturday, December 1 – say the kit is designed for those who believe Mr Blair is a "war criminal" for allowing British troops to join US forces in the 2003 invasion of Iraq.

The firm selling the range is Red Stuff Shop, the trading name of Screaming Seagull Press Ltd, a trade union volunteer workers' co-operative.

It has made headlines in the past for producing a controversial party pack to be used when ex-Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher dies.

The new kit warns potential arresters not to "assault, hit, pummel or kick" Mr Blair and to show respect to any security personnel who may be protecting him.

Jon Flaig, of the Red Stuff Shop, said: "The kit is a bit of fun – but it does have a serious side, too.

"Under international law most people would say that by taking us into the Iraq war Tony Blair is guilty of a crime against peace so why isn't he up in court for it?"

But Flaig denied that he is inciting people to commit violence against the former PM.

"This is about making a citizen's arrest, which anyone is entitled to do. We specifically warn people against assaulting Blair," he said.

But former Gillingham Labour MP Paul Clark, who served under Mr Blair's administration, hit out at the kit. He said: "This is not about serious issues or looking at what was behind the decisions made. This is a cheap trick to get people to spend their money. People should see it for what it is. There are other ways of making a protest and making your views known."

CONTROVERSIAL: The Arrest Tony Blair kit has been called a 'cheap trick'

WAR CONTINUES TO HAUNT FORMER PM

TONY Blair's ten-year reign as Prime Minister was a watershed moment in politics, transforming the fortunes of the Labour Party and returning them to power after an 18-year absence.

But his time in Downing Street will forever be dogged by his decision to take British forces into conflict in Iraq.

Earlier this year, he was confronted by an intruder as he gave evidence at the Leveson Inquiry into press standards, who accused him of being a "war criminal".

Public appearances he makes in the UK are also dogged by protestors.

There is even a website dedicated to arresting the former Prime Minister with cash prizes up for grabs for anyone who can prove they attempted a citizen's arrest.

WELFARE

PM proposals to cut benefits to the under-25s are slammed by charities

By Dean Kilpatrick
dean.kilpatrick@archant.co.uk

THOUSANDS of young people in the county are at risk of being made homeless if government cuts to housing benefits are implemented, according to a Kent charity.

Proposals – which would see all under 25-year-old claimants taken off the welfare bill – have been put forward by Prime Minister David Cameron in the latest round of cost-cutting measures to ease the state's benefits bill.

But critics of the idea say it could leave vulnerable youngsters in "dire straits".

There are just over 10,000 claimants of housing benefits under 25 in Kent, with the average recipient receiving £80 a week to help keep a roof over their head.

But suggestions young people should remain living with their parents to ease the financial burden on the state has been brought into question by the chief executive of Kent and Medway homeless charity Porchlight.

He said many youngsters dependent on the benefit have fled their family as a result of violence or abuse.

COST-CUTTING: David Cameron

Mike Barrett said: "I do not think the policy has been thought through.

"We work closely with nearly 2,500 people a year, and about 30 per cent of them are in that age group. If they could go back home, they would.

"I fully understand what the government is trying to do in respect of setting youngsters incentives to work, but when rents are too huge and mortgages unavailable, their only help is these benefits.

"It's going to cost the government more in the long run."

Mr Barrett added that more people were feeling the effects of the economic downturn and getting in touch with the charity, adding that people from all walks of life are asking for help.

He said: "I had hoped around 18 months ago that it had peaked, but the number of people calling is going up all the time."

Chief executive of national homeless people charity Crisis, Leslie Morphy, added: "There is no way that those fleeing abusive home lives or those whose parents can't house them could be protected if this goes ahead.

"These are people who just need a little help as they start out on their adult lives, not an arbitrary and ill thought hrough cut."

The government believes scrapping the benefit for under-25s would save the state nearly £2 billion a year, although no firm decision on the idea had been made as yet.

A Department for Work and Pensions spokesman said: "We're looking at a range of options for future reforms to the welfare system – changing the eligibility criteria for housing benefit is one of these. Any changes would affect future claimants only and we would still ensure that vulnerable people remain protected."

BENEFITS STIGMA

A QUARTER of people eligible for state benefits have not claimed money they are entitled to because of the stigma attached to them, according to a University of Kent study.

Research carried out by Dr Ben Baumberg discovered that one in four people have either delayed claiming or refused to do so because of the fear of being associated with the so-called benefits culture.

Dr Baumberg said: "When questioned, we found the public vastly overestimate the numbers of people 'claiming falsely or committing fraud', with one in five believing a majority of claims to be outright fraudulent."

Head of policy at non-profit service Turn2us, Rob Tolan, said: "At a human level, stigma is resulting in thousands of elderly, sick and disabled people skipping meals or keeping the heating off, lest they be tarred with the 'scrounger' brush.

"One lady we helped, who was left disabled by a brain tumour, ate porridge five nights a week, rather than ask for help."

GLOWING: Boy band District3 were joined by Heart DJ Toby Anstis (second left) at the switch on

EVENT

Thousands see District3 shine

X FACTOR stars District3 attracted thousands of fans to watch them switch on the Christmas lights at Tunbridge Wells' Royal Victoria Place shopping complex.

The boy band joined Heart DJ Toby Anstis to flick the switch on the illuminations.

Some 3,500 fans gathered for the event, which saw the band give their first live public performance since being booted off the popular ITV1 talent show earlier this month.

Marc Burchett, RVP's marketing manager, said: "District3's performance was amazing and they certainly made this year's switch on at Royal Victoria Place our biggest and best ever."

TRANSPORT

Fears land sale could wreck hopes of reviving vital rail link to Brighton

By Chrissie Daniels
chrissie.daniels@archant.co.uk

CAMPAIGNERS holding out hope of reactivating a direct rail link between Tunbridge Wells and Brighton say they fear the sale of a piece of land in the town could scupper their dreams forever.

The service last ran in the 1960s, taking travellers through Eridge and Crowborough and down towards the West Sussex seaside city.

But since 1985, when the last service linking Tunbridge Wells with Eridge finished, the route has been left closed.

Supporters of the line say it should be reopened and form a vital part of the rail transport network.

However, a triangular piece of land at Warwick Park in Tunbridge Wells – which includes part of the old railway track – is set to go under the hammer and sold to the highest bidder.

Campaigners fear it could be snapped up by a housing developer.

The land had been bought by charity Railway Paths for just £1 in 2001, and has a covenant in place which forbids building on the path of the old track. It is feared the convenant could be circumnavigated should a developer win the auction.

Railway campaigner Brian Hart said: "It's about strengthening the whole rail network. We are nervous because we have seen these things happen in the past.

"The charity is hoping to get quite a bit of money for it. If the line is lost it does mean that we can't reopen the railway.

"No-one is going to build a new railway; we have got to make the best out of what we have got and bring back into use this railway. It's vital.

"There are a lot of people that support the reopening. We do not want a developer to come in and make a quick profit at the public's expense. Tunbridge Wells council should take a stand."

SHUT: The service to Brighton ended in the 1960s

The council were unavailable to comment.

A statement from the charity read: "We had hoped to create new routes on land we own near Tunbridge Wells to help local communities walk and cycle around the area.

"Unfortunately this now looks like it cannot happen, so we're selling the land to help fund our charitable activities, including maintaining railway structures.

"However, this sale does not jeopardise the future of the disused railway line that runs through it. Most of this land of course did not carry a former railway line, and the route of the line itself is doubly protected, not only by the local planning authority but by the Secretary of State for Transport who would have to authorise this land to be used in a way that would prevent the railway from being re-opened.

"We are confident that our proposed sale does not prejudice the possible reopening of the railway."

Youngster fights to restore graves of our brave VC heroes

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

HE may only be 12, but George Taylor is ensuring the county's bravest war heroes are not forgotten.

The youngster is already responsible for the upkeep of 29 of the graves of those awarded the Victoria Cross – the highest military honour for valour in the face of the enemy.

And now he has launched a campaign to restore the derelict grave of a soldier awarded the VC during World War One.

He was so moved by the condition of the final resting place of Lt Col Arthur Drummond Borton, in St Mary's Church, Hunton, near Maidstone, he is looking to raise money for its refurbishment

The graves of VC winners who died in combat are maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission – but those who lived on are the responsibility of their family. According to records, the Borton family died out with the last known member being a niece called Dorothea who was last heard of in a London nursing home in 1973.

IN MEMORY: George Taylor believes war hero Arthur Drummond Borton deserves better for his grave, pictured top

George, from Northfleet, was inspired to help former servicemen at the age of eight when he was moved to tears by a news item about a veteran having to sell his medals to pay heating bills.

Pictures of a vandalised VC holder's grave further upset him and he contacted the Victoria Cross Association asking how he could help.

Dave Taylor, George's father, said: "They said it all comes down to money, so he started sending in £5 of his pocket money each month. He then became the youngest person in the UK tasked with tracking down derelict graves of VC holders and reporting on their condition."

George went online to locate the final resting places of the VC holders buried in Kent and followed up with visits. It was then he encountered Lt Col Borton's memorial, covered in rotting foliage with its inscription all but erased.

George said: "It's just so wrong and I don't like it. After all he went through surely he must deserve better than this?"

He then started his fundraising. George's parents and sister Katie, 10, are behind his activities, which have also made classmates at Northfleet Technical College proud.

His interest in the military was sparked by museum visits with his father and a family with a strong background of service.

George has written about the plight of war veterans to Prime Minister David Cameron and US President Barack Obama.

He has also met the Queen, who sent him a good luck telegram before a sponsored walk, and thrown poppies into the Trafalgar Sqaure fountains as part of Remembrance Day.

George, who has written to MI6 asking for work experience and wants to be a policeman "in the armed response unit" said: "I hate the thought of people in the forces thinking no-one cares."

LIFE ON THE FRONTLINE

ARTHUR Drummond Borton was born in Chevening, near Sevenoaks, on July 1, 1883, and educated at Eton and the Royal Military College Sandhurst, before being commissioned into the 60th Rifles, with whom he served in the South African War.

Retiring from the Army in 1910, he rejoined in 1914 and after service with the King's Royal Rifles he became an observer with the Royal Flying Corps in France, where he broke his neck in three places and was declared unfit.

Despite this he went to Gallipoli as a Lieutenant Commander in the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve where he won the DSO. Next appointed Army Second-in-Command of the 2nd/22nd London Regiment in June 1916, he served in France and Palestine. Lt Col Borton won his VC at Tel-el-Sheria, Palestine, on November 7, 1917, when he led his attacking companies against a strongly held enemy position as the British fought an army of Ottoman Turks. He was decorated by King George V and later served in the North Russian campaign of 1919.

He was a pall bearer at the burial of the Unknown Warrior on November 11, 1920.

The hero died on January 5, 1933, in Southwold, Suffolk, and his award is in the regimental museum at Clandon in Surrey.

TECHNOLOGY

Historic documents come alive at touch of a button

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A HIGH-tech system designed to allow everyone to explore rare and ancient documents, has been created by academics.

Experts at the University of Kent have developed a system to digitise documents which previously could only be studied under severe restrictions due to their delicate and valuable nature.

The new software system, called DocExplore, means the files can stop gathering dust and be easily accessed alongside detailed explanations.

It's an ambitious project led by Dr Richard Guest and Professor Michael Fairhurst from the university's school of engineering and digital arts. It has just been launched at an international workshop in Rouen, France, and is set to move in to its next phase.

EXPLORE: The software provides extra information with your documents

Unveiling the system, Dr Guest said: "We were delighted to present the software to academics, scholars and museum curators at the workshop which acted as a unique backdrop to share experiences and knowledge on exploring historical documents from within a range of disciplines."

The next stage involves a public exhibition for Canterbury residents to access documents held in the cathedral's archives using touch screens.

Dr Guest said the system acts so that examining the documents has the 'feel' of having it right in front of the user. He said it simulates, as far as possible, the experience of accessing the physical object itself. But users can see much more than the document – they can access translations and transcriptions, read more about the period in which it was written, its contents and who would have used it at the time by using the additional text, picture, sound and video resources that are a feature of the system.

It also allows scholars to explore many unique features of a document such as handwriting analysis and text searching.

Dr Guest said: "We are extremely excited to be entering the final phase of the DocExplore project, which will open up rich collections of key documents and make them digitally accessible to the public.

"The people of Kent will be able to learn and interact with significant documents, whilst exploring the history of the region through its records dating back many centuries."

The University of Kent teamed up with the University of Rouen to develop the software.

In addition to showcasing the newly-developed software, the workshop encouraged cross-Channel dialogue for the first time between professionals involved in the development of techniques to support the analysis and management of digital documents.

"The winter weather really brought to the forefront of my mind why I love being at a retirement development."

MUSIC

How rock legend Jimi Hendrix struck a chord with county as fans prepare to mark his 70th

By Chris Britcher
chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

HE IS one of rock music's most iconic performers; famed for scintilliating live performances and inspiring generations to take up the guitar.

But his tragic death at just 27 robbed the world of Jimi Hendrix. Had he survived, this Tuesday would have been his 70th birthday.

What is a little known part of the guitar maestro's life is his time spent in the county – both due to his friendship with Noel Redding, guitarist in the Jimi Hendrix Experience, who was born and grew up Folkestone – but also the house Hendrix rented in a Kent quiet village.

Coblers, in hamlet of Lymbridge Green, being Folkestone and Ashford, was rented by Hendrix a little over a year before his death. Its name a poorly spelt joke.

For the 14 months he stayed there, it provided Hendrix with a rural retreat from the high life of London where his flat was a haven for the likes of fellow musicians Mick Jagger, Eric Clapton and Paul McCartney.

The five-bedroom, 16th century farmhouse was enlarged after his death and is now valued at around £1 million.

FILM SCREENING OF LEGENDARY CONCERT

FANS of Hendrix can get to see the star on the big screen and in high-definition when his iconic performance at Woodstock is shown on the cinema at shopping complex Bluewater.

To mark his 70th anniversary, the film will be screened on Thursday and the following Tuesday, at 7.30pm.

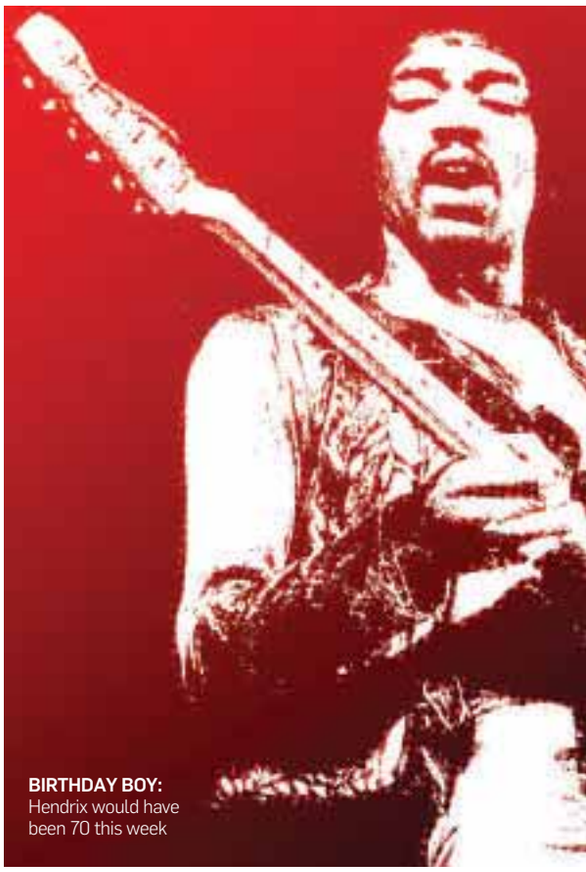

Filmed at the US festival in 1969, the archive footage, captured by Academy Award-winning director Michael Wadleigh, will be shown uninterrupted in its original performance sequence.

Hendrix 70: Live at Woodstock will include the Road To Woodstock documentary, directed by Grammy Award-winner Bob Smeaton, and will feature extensive footage and interviews revealing the difficulties in staging the legendary festival and securing Hendrix as the headliner.

ROCK ON: Hendrix plays Woodstock

The concert includes explosive renditions of Voodoo Child (Slight Return), Purple Haze and Foxy Lady as well as Hendrix's dramatic interpretation of the US national anthem, the Star Spangled Banner.

Noel Redding

BORN in Folkestone, Noel Redding joined Hendrix's band in 1966, and performed with the Jimi Hendrix Experience until 1969. He was the first to join – switching to playing bass – and the first to leave.

He first performed at Hythe Youth Club and at his school, the Harvey Grammar, after learning the violin, mandolin and eventually guitar.

His distinctive style saw him credited with considerable influence over the Hendrix sound, performing on Hendrix's three landmark albums – Are You Experienced?, Axis: Bold as Love and Electric Ladyland.

He was found dead at the home in Ireland he had retired to, in 2003.

He suffered from "shock haemorrhage due to oesophageal varices in reaction to cirrhosis of the liver".

He was 57-years-old.

Legend's untimely end

AT the very peak of his powers, Hendrix became a victim of the excesses which have robbed the world of so many talents.

At just 27, Hendrix choked to death on his own vomit in the flat of his girlfriend, Monika Dannemann.

There are conflicting reports as to just when he died, but he was found by police and ambulance at around 11.30am on September 18, 1970. It is believed he had been dead for some time. He had been at a party the night before.

Dannemann committed suicide in 1996.

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

TV star and wildlife expert Chris Packham will be one of the judges selecting the winner of this year's RSPCA Young Photographer Awards.

And among those vying for honours will be these two stunning images, taken by youngsters in Kent.

A shortlist of 31 photographs have been selected from thousands of entries, with the winners being named at a special ceremony next month.

Among them are eight-year-old Stephen Brown from Faversham and his American Eagle in the Dark image in the under-12s category.

Meanwhile, Katie Alston, 15, from Maidstone, will be hoping to impress with her Two Old Birds Sat on a Park Bench picture in the 12-15-year-olds category.

The winners will be unveiled at the RSPCA's offices near Horsham on December 14.

Mr Packham said: "One of the things I love most is that young people tend to use the resources on their doorstep.

"A lot of adults feel they have to go to Africa and photograph a leopard or something, but kids do not have these options.

"Most of them have no choice but to stick to their back yard and as a result we see really simple but often very beautiful pictures of garden wildlife like flies, spiders, birds and ants."

The overall winner will be treated to a specialist three-day wildlife photography break.

TALENT: Jason Steel and his award-winning picture

PICTURE PERFECT

A POSTMAN from Bexleyheath has delivered the goods and won a Kent Wildlife Photographer of the Year award.

Jason Steel was selected for his stunning shot of a swan taken on a misty morning at Foots Cray Meadows in Bexley.

He will be presented with his award on Monday at the award ceremony at The Barn Yard in Gore Farm, Upchurch.

Small boat fishermen lobby Brussels for fair deal

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

FLEETS of fishermen working the rich seas around the county are hoping European chiefs make a landmark change to fishing laws to ensure small boats get a fair deal.

In the latest chapter of the long-running row over how our seas are fished, one leading Kent fisherman insists the controversial quota system should be scrapped and started again.

The chairman of the Whitstable Fishermen's Association, Phil Edwards, was speaking after a Greenpeace mission to Brussels calling on the EU to make life fairer for operators of small boats under 10 metres.

Currently, three quarters of the British fishing fleet, including those in Kent, is made up of small boats, yet they are allowed to catch just four per cent of stocks.

Greenpeace took a delegation of British fishermen to Brussels to demand a new fisheries policy that is fairer to small-scale coastal fishermen. They joined fishermen from across Europe.

ACTION: A delegation of British fishermen joined others from around Europe to appeal to EU chiefs

They said 96 per cent of stocks are controlled by a handful of what are called 'producer organisations', which tend to represent larger boats.

The small boat fishermen are asking that the once-in-a-decade reform of the EU's Common Fisheries Policy be used as a unique opportunity to ensure those who fish sustainably have a right to fish; bringing an end to what they say are harmful subsidies and unsustainable and destructive practices; and ensuring the restoration of the health of seas in Europe and the rest of the world.

Mr Edwards said: "The whole system needs to be thought out again. It is too complicated and unfair to those with small boats. I have a mountain of paperwork to do all the time, and that's while battling the odds to make a living."

He said the system of quotas and leasing quotas from other boats is much too involved, adding: "I think successive governments are just hoping the small fishermen simply give up and go away. The problems are continually swept under the carpet."

Jerry Percy, of NUTFA, the organisation representing hundreds of under-10 metre vessels in the UK, said: "Fishing is a way of life that small-scale fishermen have practiced for generations and that is threatened as never before.

"While not being caused by artisanal fishermen, overfishing has had a disproportionate effect on their ability to survive. If any boats need to stop fishing, it shouldn't be the smaller, low-impact boats that provide fish and directly support communities."

WHAT ARE FISHING QUOTAS?

IN order to protect stocks of certain fish, European fishing policy dictates each country which fishes in European waters, has a European directive determining how much fish in terms of weight are caught and at what time of the year.

The quota applies to the maximum weight of a particular species caught on any trip or over any season.

Punishments for over-fishing – and spot checks regularly occur – are severe, and include large fines and even having boats impounded. Therefore, if quotas are exceeded, fishermen are forced to simply throw back the excess fish. Frequently these fish will already be dead – a situation which is widely criticised.

FAMILY: Curator Alice Martin with an oil portrait of Leonard Jerome, Churchill's American grandfather

International bloodlines converged to create a truly remarkable leader

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A MAJOR exhibition at the home of Winston Churchill, examining his little known Anglo-American links, is under way.

The display is called In the Blood and is the first-ever temporary exhibition at Chartwell.

It explores the extraordinary story of Churchill's Anglo-American ancestry and considers how the two branches of his family – the Jeromes of New York and the Dukes of Marlborough of Blenheim – shaped his incredible character and life.

In a time when races were strictly divided by society, his American grandmother Clarissa is believed to have had Iroquois Indian blood. Meanwhile, the 1st Duke of Marlborough, John, fought heroically on the battlefield.

The National Trust, which runs the house, said this is a fascinating and compelling blend of British tradition and New World adventure, energy and enterprise. The transatlantic genetic inheritance created perhaps the greatest British wartime leader.

The display takes visitors behind the scenes of Churchill's childhood to reveal his touching relationship with his beloved nanny 'Woomany' as well as the complex relationships with his mother and father, Lord and Lady Randolph.

A wide range of objects have been gathered from around the world, half of which have never been displayed before.

GREAT ANCESTRY: Randolph Churchill with a pair of duelling pistols belonging to John, 1st Duke of Marlborough, and the builder of Blenheim Palace

The major highlights to look out for are the pair of duelling pistols and Garter Star belonging to Churchill's 17th century ancestor John, 1st Duke of Marlborough, the builder of Blenheim Palace.

Then there is the charcoal drawing of Churchill's glamorous Brooklyn-born mother Jennie Jerome by society artist John Singer Sargent, and diamond, ruby and sapphire rings given by Churchill's father to his mother, items which have been reunited especially for this exhibition.

Significant family portraits and even locks of his hair as a child are available to view.

Randolph Churchill, Winston's great-grandson, said: "I am delighted to have been able to loan a number of family objects for display at Chartwell this winter.

"This exhibition shines a light on Winston's parents and his forefathers, who were so important in giving him the backbone he had in the dark days of 1940.

"Indeed he later wrote of that time: 'I felt as if I were walking with destiny, and that all my past life had been but a preparation for this hour and for this trial'."

Historian Professor Sir David Cannadine, added: "It is a timely innovation at Chartwell to begin holding and hosting exhibitions which help us to understand more fully the extraordinary range and richness of Churchill's life.

"His Anglo-American ancestry was very important to him personally, and became very important to him politically. In the Blood helps us understand how and why this was so."

Lady Churchill handed Chartwell, in Westerham, to the National Trust in 1965.

Curator of In the Blood, Alice Martin, said: "I am personally very excited to see the fantastic oil paintings of Sir Winston's grandparents and the beautiful engagement rings back together for perhaps the first time in more than 100 years."

In the Blood is open from 11am to 4pm everyday until the end of February. Tickets are priced at £6.50 for adults.

OPINION

There are better alternatives

Rehman Chishti considers the implication of a Thames Estuary airport and how it would irrevocably alter the area

THERE are many economic and environmental reasons why the Thames Estuary is not a suitable location for a new hub airport.

These reasons – from the serious threat of bird strikes to the SS Richard Montgomery, packed full of explosives – have been well-debated.

Given this, it is no surprise that the idea has not found favour with the public, the major airlines or MPs. Only recently a survey by Ipsos MORI disclosed that only 16 per cent of MPs support the idea.

But let us consider for a moment, what would be the impact of such an airport on Kent and Medway?

One of the proposals is for a four runway airport, operating 24-hours-a-day and handling up to 150 million passengers a year. Such a vast airport, which would be twice as large as Heathrow, would require significant infrastructure and transport links to support it.

It is suggested this could be achieved by linking the airport to the existing high speed rail service. Whilst there may currently be spare capacity on the train line – Eurostar only uses 40 per cent of it – there is interest from several European train operators in running new passenger and freight services in the next few years.

In short, new train lines would have to be built, carving up our communities and the countryside. It is more than likely we would also witness a repeat of the challenges seen over the High Speed Two route as such lines would pass through parts of Kent and Essex.

And it would require major road access. To avoid congestion the M2 would have to be upgraded or new motorways built to handle demand.

Airports also rely heavily on supporting services and industries and Kent could only accommodate them through the building of vast new industrial estates.

An airport of this proportion would require at least 70,000 employees, which is even more than those who are unemployed in Kent and Medway. It would result in an influx of new arrivals and where would all these people live?

Clearly it would require new homes, schools and hospitals, piling pressure on existing services. To put the scale of this into some context, Medway's annual housing target is 815 dwellings per year up to 2028, far less than the thousands of homes that would be required to support a new airport.

Such developments could threaten our existing green areas such as Capstone Valley and the North Downs Way, located in a designated Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty.

New jobs would be decades away and not the jobs we need to create now

On top of this is the environmental impact on those living in the areas surrounding the airport who will see increased noise, light and air pollution.

Supporters of the scheme say it is worth sacrificing Kent and Medway for the thousands of jobs it would create. But such jobs would be decades away and not the jobs we need to create now and that are being created through our regeneration schemes.

If an airport in the Thames Estuary was allowed to go ahead it would irrevocably alter Kent and Medway.

I do not believe this is the solution to our aviation needs. There are much better alternatives which will be considered as part of the Government's review.

■ Rehman Chishti is the Conservative MP for Gillingham and Rainham.

KOS COMMENT

New archbishop has a challenge on his hands

IS Kent losing faith? Or is it that when a person dies, loved ones would prefer the service to be a celebration of their life, rather than a religious ceremony?

Some will argue that in death, it's only right that religion should play a part, believing them to be moving on to some sort of afterlife.

But gone are the days of the family ritual of the Sunday church visit. While families and friends still get together, it's more likely for a roast dinner than to unite in quiet reflection at church.

One could argue that as long as families get together on Sundays, that sense of community is still alive. Either way, the fact is church is now less popular and the new archbishop has a job to try and get congregations back.

Think before judging

IT would be easy for some to question the grieving mother who claims her dead son writes to her every day.

But whether or not you believe, most will understand the need to find peace in the wake of such a trauma and facing every parent's worst nightmare.

Her comfort is her salvation.

Thank you for your support

PLEASE will you pass on my heartfelt thanks to the people of Kent for electing me as their first Police and Crime Commissioner.

I am humbled by the scale of the vote and the confidence people have shown in me. They can be assured I am devoted to Kent and dedicated to serve the whole community.

In office I will stand by all the issues I have been campaigning on over the last few months, such as keeping party politics out of policing, cutting crime, enhancing visible community policing (Kent's number one priority) and fighting any further Government cuts.

As so many recent events have shown, trust in public life is everything. I will always put Kent's needs and views first.

I promise that you will have the most visible, accessible and responsive police commissioner in the land.

Ann Barnes, Kent's Police and Crime Commissioner

Election raised police profile

MAY I take this opportunity to thank the 16,000 (almost) people in Kent who voted for me in the police commissioner elections last week. Whatever else happened, the elections did at least cause a good number of people to think more about policing and the priorities for the years ahead.

I am sure the electorate chose a good candidate, and I wish Ann Barnes the very best in her new post.

Piers Wauchope, UKIP

Showing up party politics

IT is with considerable relief that the people of Kent voted for independent Ann Barnes to be the new PCC.

As her campaign communications manager I saw how her message – that our police should be free of political interference – resonated with all shades of voter whoever they traditionally supported at previous elections.

During this campaign, Ann was subjected to so many attacks and aspersions about when she was the chair of the Kent Police Authority and her independent candidature.

It became lamentable that certain candidates would stoop to such gutter tactics. They focused on attacking Ann instead of talking about how they would manage the future of our police itself.

Ann rose above these attacks and stuck to her guns to achieve a landslide victory with 65 per cent of the vote.

She was up against the might of the Conservative Party's monopoly in Kent, with 17 MPs to call upon and huge numbers of foot soldiers.

Ann won because of her principled message and the dedication of a small, group of brilliant and loyal volunteers, including the wisdom of the Gurkha campaigner, Peter Carroll, who delivered a volte-face in how the police should be managed.

I can truthfully say that with the total distrust of the main party politicians as a key factor for their demise, the campaign tactics of a few have contributed further to the climate of cynicism around "party first" politicians. The Maidstone and Weald MP is a case in point. All over the voter when campaigning, but when in power only support their party and careers.

Ann Barnes will put people of Kent first. Watch this space.

Howard Cox, Cranbrook

Incredulous at Westminster

THE numbnuts in Westminster continue to live in denial. Now they're having a review as to why the turnout was so low for the PCC elections.

They really expected us to rush down to vote in a blind auction. The equivalent of being blindfolded and asked to throw a dart at a wall with some unknown names on it. Are they for real? Should they really be running a country? They haven't a clue.

Phil Granger, West Malling

We, the public, have spoken

A GOOD government listens to the voice of the people. Nationally, on November 15, the people spoke very clearly.

The majority did not agree that the post of PCC should be a political one. Therefore, they either stayed at home, voted for the independents or made it clear on their ballot papers.

Remarks made on spoiled ballot papers, as seen on TV, were short and concise. These are the opinion of the public and should be published.

The people, by their actions, have spoken with eloquence. They have the right to be heard.

Mrs J Moore, Rusthall

The cameras save lives

I AM shocked when I read letters criticising the use of speed cameras. It was reported earlier this year that since speed cameras were introduced here, in 1992, the average number of people killed on our roads has more than halved from 11 each day to five.

Of course, speed cameras may not have been responsible for all this, but individual trials show that they work. In one west London trial at 21 sites in 1997, the death rate fell two thirds in three years.

Even if only half of the reduced death rate is due to speed cameras, that is still three people's lives saved daily.

Of course, it is frustrating when one is caught by a speed camera, but the solution is simple. Obey the speed limit.

Richard Mountford, Hildenborough

Disabled being made to pay

PEOPLE across the UK are taking action against cuts to disability benefits as part of the Hardest Hit Campaign.

With these cuts coming over the next few years, it will make travelling to hospitals worse due to extra parking fees or finding the money for taxis. Living with my disabled child I wonder where it will end.

I am urging readers to speak out because there are huge human costs to the Government targeting disabled people – losing support could lead to isolation and declining health. In addition, the Government wastes millions in the cost of appeals from flawed assessments, and risks long term costs because cuts to benefits like Disability Living Allowance will make it harder to cope.

The timing is critical as the Government is making decisions about benefits now, announcing its intention to cut £10 billion from welfare. Already £9bn has been cut from disability benefits and services, and the Government must rule out targeting disabled people for further 'savings' in the 2013 Budget.

On the road to find the next generation of entrepreneurs

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE Grow For It campaign, which is promoting business investment and entrepreneurship in east Kent, took to the streets with a bus tour this month.

To celebrate Global Entrepreneurship Week, business experts were on hand to advise those wishing to set up or expand their commercial activities in how they can apply for funding.

The tour, aimed mostly at young people, was designed to raise awareness of the new opportunities arising as a result of a cash injection into the area from the Government's Regional Growth Fund.

A total of £35 million has been made available with the intention of boosting the economy through employment opportunities.

Representatives from the Kent County Council-administered body Expansion East Kent were on board the bus, which visited Canterbury, Folkestone and Broadstairs advising on access to the funding for interest-free business loans.

Mentors were also available to advise on growth and start up, while businessmen and women also gave advice to young people.

Martyn Riley, of KCC, was one of those who met some of the next generation of Kent's business community.

"We have not had an investment in business on this scale before and it is there for people to take advantage of," he said. "In the past, Kent has been sadly neglected in investment because it did not rate high enough on the deprivation criteria, but that has changed in the last few years as Government has become more aware of the situation in the county.

"What Kent can offer businesses looking to come here is a skilled workforce with a wide range of abilities.

"I have been impressed with the young people I have spoken to. I do not feel that at their age I was thinking about the possibility of becoming an entrepreneur. They also show a great amount of enthusiasm."

The fund is aimed principally at sustainable businesses that create new jobs, although money can be made available to safeguard existing employment positions and the criteria for a successful application is strict.

Many of the young people who visited the touring bus were encouraged in their aims to set up in business.

Amie Rawlin, 16, from St Mary's Bay, visited the bus when it parked up at K College in Folkestone and spoke to the mentoring team.

"It was very useful to talk to experts," she said. "I wasn't actually aware that there was any investment in business in Kent and did not know it was possible to apply for a loan.

"My ambition is to set up and run my own nursery – that now seems more likely than when I stepped on the bus a few minutes ago."

IMPRESSED: KCC's Martyn Riley says the young people he has spoken to during the bus tour have shown plenty of enthusiasm

The Barron of the chamber

CAROLE Barron, director of innovation and enterprise at the University of Kent, has been appointed the new chair of Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce.

After two years as vice-chair, she takes over the position from Henry Nydam, and will now serve until 2014 with Tim Allen of M J Allen as vice-chair.

Barron, a director of the chamber since 2008, said: "I am delighted to have the opportunity to chair the board of directors of one of the most proactive accredited chambers in the South East.

"It is an exciting time. With the growth into the Thames Gateway, the chamber offers a large geographical network of support to our members, led by our chief executive, Jo James."

James said: "The chamber welcomes Carole as chair, with many thanks for all her help thus far. We very much look forward to a close and productive relationship.

"We also welcome three new directors who were elected at the AGM.

"Our board of directors is a great strength to the chamber and we thank all of them for their contribution."

NEW CHAIR: Carole Barron

Optimism maintained as moderate growth continues in private sector

BUSINESS activity has risen for the third month running, and while growth was moderate it still showed the sharpest increase in seven months, according to the latest figures.

Data from Lloyds TSB signalled that the South East's private-sector economy remained in growth territory but failed to accelerate notably from September's weak pace.

New business expansion was moderate, albeit the fastest since March, while employment registered a fractional increase following the previous month's job-shedding.

Cost pressures remained stronger than the long-run survey average, leading to a slight increase in prices charged. Private-sector output in the South East increased for the third month running in October.

That compared favourably with a marginal decline across the UK as a whole, although the rate of expansion in the latest period was muted as the Business Activity Index posted 51.0, from 50.3 in September.

Although services activity increased at a solid rate, this was partly offset by another drop in manufacturing production. Total activity growth was supported by a further increase in new business at the start of Q4.

New workloads have risen for four months, and the latest increase was the strongest since March. However, the rate of expansion was weaker than the long-run survey average and new orders at goods-producers continued to decline.

The latest survey data signalled a marginal increase in private-sector employment in the South East.

Average prices rose sharply in October, with the rate of inflation edging up to a 13-month high. A variety of sources was identifuied, including food, fuel, energy, labour and paper.

Phil Beales, area director for Lloyds TSB Commercial in Kent, said: "Total private-sector output rose only modestly, weighed down by a fall in manufacturing production.

"However, there is reason to be optimistic, as employment stabilised and new business increased at the fastest rate since March.

"The labour market should also be supported in the coming months by the solid increase in service-sector activity in October."

Drop in jobless numbers slows but federation staying positive

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE recent sharp decline in the number of people in Kent out of work has halted – bringing disappointment to business leaders hoping for a repeat of last month's encouraging news on the jobless front.

The number claiming Jobseekers' Allowance in October fell by just three people in Kent and Medway to 35,034 – a month after the figure fell by 177.

A little over half the boroughs in the county saw a small drop in the number of people out of work, according to figures from the Office of National Statistics.

However, increases in Maidstone – up 75 to 2,481 – and Dover – up 70 to 2,547 – meant the overall unemployment picture for the county stayed almost the same. Gravesham's total went up by 25 to 2,569, while Ashford's increased by 13 to 1,962. Medway also saw a rise of 10 people out of work from 6,938 to 6,948, as did Dartford – up nine to 1,751.

The biggest fall came in Canterbury, which dropped 78 to a total of 2,303.

The Federation of Small Businesses said it was disappointed that the decline in unemployment had stalled but members remained positive about long-term economic prospects.

Roger House, FSB chairman for Kent and Medway, said: "It is good news that national unemployment continues to fall and unfortunate that we have not seen the same level of decline in Kent and Medway.

"These are the last figures before the Chancellor delivers his Autumn Statement and he must help to embed this growth by bringing forward policies which help Kent's small firms to grow.

"However, the stats show long-term unemployment continues to rise, especially for women and 16- to 17-year-olds. We know small firms in Kent and Medway are key to taking on people who have been out of work for 12 months or more.

"Recent news that only 16,000 companies have taken up the regional National Insurance Contributions holiday must provide the signal that it needs to be extended to Kent companies. Not only would extending the scheme to UK-wide micro businesses add £1.3 billion to GDP, but it would create additional jobs and job opportunities."

"Our Autumn 2012 FSB Small Business Barometer showed small businesses in Kent and Medway are optimistic, with 44 per cent forecasting improved prospects in 2013. We hope this is a temporary break on economic growth."

ON THE SEARCH: The number of people in the county who are claiming Jobseekers' Allowance has continued to fall but not at the high rate recorded last month, with some areas reporting an increase

Communication failings put small firms at risk

IN the first survey of its kind, the Federation of Small Businesses has uncovered a serious lack of communication between the Government and companies.

A quarter of small firms do not know there are major changes to the way they will have to report their payroll coming into force in about six months' time, according to the study.

A snap poll of 1,700 small firms found that only 16 per cent of respondents were fully aware of the Real Time Information (RTI) programme – a new flagship way of reporting payroll – and a quarter had never heard of it, despite it being critical to the success of Universal Credit.

RTI is a new programme designed by HMRC to gather regular information about employees. It aims to simplify reporting new starters and leavers as well as making the payroll process simpler and less burdensome.

It will also support the payment of Universal Credits to those who receive them.

Two-thirds of respondents to the FSB's survey are not confident that RTI will achieve these aims.

With less than six months to go until businesses have to comply with the new rules, more than 60 per cent of firms have not had any communication from HMRC about the changes.

Businesses think that learning new processes to deal with the changes as well as dealing with potential enquiries and inspections from HMRC will pose a challenge.

Roger House, FSB chairman for Kent and Medway, said: "With only six months until RTI is due to be implemented, the FSB has real concerns not enough businesses are aware that is just around the corner. This system is linked to the Government's flagship Universal Credit scheme and we're concerned it could flop if Government does not step up its game in communicating the changes.

"There are a number of steps that a business must complete before they can provide Real Time Information to HMRC, so it is critical that those affected know about it.

"Of the very small number of firms that are aware of the change, 30 per cent have had to buy new software for their business. HMRC needs to act now so that all small firms can prepare their business as they only have six months in which to do it.

"Without adequate communication and education from Government, small firms won't be able to prepare."

Forty-somethings are giving birth to a new generation of businesses

BUSINESS life in Kent begins at 40, according to a new survey.

The study found that the majority (78 per cent) of small businesses were set up by people over that age.

The report, independently commissioned by Viking – supplier of office supplies to small and medium-sized enterprises – also revealed that the outlook for the region was promising.

More than half (54 per cent) of businesses are expecting to maintain their current position over the next 12 months and a further 15 per cent are set to grow over the same period.

"Against the backdrop of the current economic circumstances, it is particularly pleasing to see that the majority of businesses in Kent are expecting to at least hold their ground over the next year," said John O'Keeffe, commercial director at Viking. "The region does also appear to be full of opportunity, with a considerable number of 40-somethings bringing their working experience to the small-business market."

Also in the report, 96 per cent of people in the region stated that they believed that on average small-business workers did more than the standard eight-hour day.

INTERNATIONAL LINKS

Event highlights Vietnam as the next big thing

KENT hosted a high-level trade delegation from Vietnam that met business representatives in an effort to build trade links.

Organised by Kent County Council and Locate in Kent, the county's investment promotion agency, with the assistance of UK Trade and Investment (UKTI), the UK-Vietnam Networking Event was designed to highlight trade, investment and business opportunities between the two countries.

The Vietnamese delegation was led by Ho Thi Kim Thoa, vice-minister of commerce and industry, and included Vu Quang Minh, ambassador to the UK. They were joined by representatives of the Departments for Europe, Market Regulation, and International Co-operation, as well as a number of Vietnamese businesses.

The event was held at Leeds Castle because of Locate in Kent deputy chairman Warwick Morris's links with Vietnam.

A former career diplomat, he was Britain's ambassador there from 2000 to 2003 and is an adviser on Vietnam to Lloyd's insurance market.

SPEAKER: Ho Thi Kim Thoa, the Vietnamese vice-minister of commerce and industry

The morning was opened by Alex King, deputy leader of Kent County Council, before vice-minister Thoa delivered the keynote address.

Delegates also heard from Piers Craven, UKTI deputy director for trade and investment in Vietnam, on why the country offered such exciting prospects for UK companies looking to trade there.

The event included presentations from Vietnam's Foreign Investment Agency on the country's economic and investment policies and from Jack Howell, chief executive officer of Prudential in the country.

"I know from my three years spent in Vietnam and my continued work on UK-Vietnam relations, just how many excellent and varied opportunities there are for UK companies to do business and build important links with their counterparts there," said Morris after the event.

"The UK-Vietnam relationship is developing fast. Two-way trade and investment is increasing rapidly and I hope the event helped businesses from both countries build a better understanding of the other's market, and that links between the two sides will grow as a result."

King said: "That this important event aimed at building trade between the two countries was held in Kent speaks volumes for the county's vision and foresight in developing international relations and encouraging investment.

"While the focus of the event was on trade between both countries, the links and relationships established on the day will doubtless be rewarded in the future by Vietnamese investment here in Kent."

Women's wages under spotlight on WEA course

ADULT education organisation the WEA is launching a seven-week course looking at examining the wages of women during the 19th and 20th century.

The Workers' Educational Association's Canterbury branch will see Working Kent Women 1840 to 1940 begin in January.

It will be held at the Friend's Meeting House in The Friars.

The course, which will be taught by Alyss Dye, will look at the history of women's waged work during the 19th and 20th centuries and explore the typical jobs Kentish women would have had during this time; from domestic services including housekeeping and child rearing to hop-picking and from pea-picking to paper-making.

The course will run on Wednesday afternoons from January 16, between 2pm to 4pm.

It costs £55.30. There are a number of free spaces if students receive income-related benefit.

No previous knowledge or qualifications are required to join the course.

The WEA is the UK's largest voluntary provider of adult education with almost 65,000 students nationwide attending its courses between 2010-11.

Many of its courses are organised by volunteer-led branches - such as that in Canterbury.

Media course makes the news as graduates land leading jobs

HOT off the press is news that journalism graduates from the University of Kent continue to be among the most sought after recruits by leading media outlets and organisations.

The university said recent graduates from the centre of journalism's undergraduate BA in journalism and the news industry and postgraduate multimedia journalism MA, have done well.

They have joined organisations like the Sun, the Huffington Post, ITV Meridian, the Daily Mail, BBC Radio, Sky Italia, and even this paper.

The courses are accredited by the National Council for the Training of Journalists and is also the only UK academic programme of its type to offer a guaranteed placement for students during their studies.

Based at the university's Medway campus, the centre's facilities include two state-of-the-art multimedia newsrooms and dedicated radio and television studios.

Laura Garcia Rodriguez, who graduated in 2012, is now working for ITV Meridian and attributes her achievements to the experience and passion of the teaching staff.

She said: "I believe the success that my colleagues and I have had after completing an MA in multimedia journalism at the University of Kent is due entirely to the staff and their full commitment to their students. The curriculum is very well thought out and outlines a series of skills and knowledge that anyone wanting to break into journalism should have.

"But it is the professor's passion and dedication that drives the message home.

"They were straight and honest about the industry we were getting into.

"This, I believe, is the best thing I learnt from them."

And centre head Professor Tim Luckhurst, added: "We select excellent students who desperately want to be journalists and who have proved to us that they have the aptitude to make it in this uniquely competitive profession.

"They learn from top professionals in an environment that replicates as closely as possible the atmosphere of a working newsroom.

"Our facilities are superb and everyone in the Centre for Journalism is committed to doing all that we can to ensure our students realise their ambitions. I am intensely proud that so many of them succeed."

The graduates are entering the media industry at a challenging time, as it looks to capitalise on the growth of the internet and the ability to reach out to a wider audience.

College hits the right note as it unveils modern music room

FINDING the right place to fine tune musical skills can be tough and expensive, but education bosses at MidKent College have hit the right note.

Musical students with an eye on the charts of the future are able to use the new state-of-the-art live room.

It is a soundproof facility that gives talented music students the chance to hone their craft without disturbing the neighbours at home.

And it's likely to be one of the busiest places on the Medway campus.

They can practice in private while their music technology counterparts use the latest high-tech equipment to ensure the quality of the performances shine through.

Sevenoaks musician and former MidKent College lecturer Dan Clews – who performed alongside Tim Minchin as part of the Children in Need show – officially opened the live room.

He said: "The UK is the second largest music exporter in the world behind America, and it's very important we continue to invest in the future of the industry.

"I came across some very talented musicians during my time at the college and it's great they now have a room of exceptional quality to practice that talent in."

Louise Molton, head of the creative and visual arts faculty at MidKent College's Medway campus, said: "This room gives the musicians their own self-contained area to perform in, and will really help raise their performance levels. It really is a fantastic new facility."

Boots shoot a Facebook hit

SNAP: Picture perfect boots

THE Dr Martens brand has been iconic for generations, so it was a special privilege for a group of photography students to capture its very essence.

The fashion snappers at the University for the Creative Arts at Rochester jumped at the chance to show off their skills with the boots - as illustrated in the image on the right.

The first year fashion promotion students were entrusted with the company's autumn winter collection and given the brief to find the most original, outrageous or unique ways to wear a British classic that is famed for its individuality.

The very best were then uploaded for the world to see via the Dr Martens Facebook page.

UCA fashion promotion lecturer, Johannes Reponen, said: "This was a fantastic opportunity for our first year students to test their skills in styling and teamwork in a live industry project with a major British brand."

Should an advertiser wish to use other voice-overs or non-copyright free music it is the responsibility of the advertiser to pay the PRS rights should they be required to do so. Any changes to or failure to approve the TV production by the deadlines agreed between both parties will result in Archant KOS Media Ltd being given permission by the advertiser to replace the TV commercial with pictures or stills from a choice of photography supplied by the media owner until the advertiser can supply a TV commercial produced at their own cost and risk outside of this agreement. The advertiser also accepts and agrees that this action would not reduce the value or cost of their membership. Any cost of changes required to the TV commercial throughout the advertiser's agreement will be borne by the advertiser outside of this agreement.
20. Each advertiser accepts that their ranking and position within Archant KOS Media Ltd's search engine will be equal to those within their category (Platinum, Gold, Silver, Bronze, etc) other than they will be ranked based on the search engine criteria of optimisation within their level (Platinum, Gold, Silver or Bronze).

c. In the event that payment is not received by Archant KOS Media Ltd by the due date, the media owner reserves the right to charge interest on all overdue balances calculated on a daily basis at the rate of two per cent above the minimum lending rate of National Westminster Bank Plc from time to time in force.

e. The Advertiser will be liable for all costs incurred by Archant KOS Media Ltd in the recovery of debts not paid by the due date.
f. Payment may be made by cheque, credit transfer, direct debit, cash and any major credit card.
23. Any discount which Archant KOS Media Ltd may have agreed with the Advertiser shall be forfeited in the event of failure by the Advertiser to complete the contract or to meet the above credit terms.

THE INTERVIEW

Chris Difford

Back at the junction

Frontman talks with Joe Bill about the latest incarnation of Squeeze

SQUEEZE have done it all. The chart-topping hits, the bust-ups, the questionable rock'n'roll lifestyles and the series of triumphant comebacks. They have been cited as influences by many of today's top artists and their undeniable talent has seen them gather fans across four decades.

South London's premier proper pop group can be truly considered British musical legends as they confirm a return to form with a new album and winter tour.

Fronted by the pairing of Chris Difford and Glenn Tilbrook, Squeeze seem to have something that every band craves – longevity.

Guitarist, lyricist and singer Chris Difford, far left in the picture, has been an almost constant fixture of the Squeeze machine since its birth in 1974.

"We're a bit like the family cat – we go out and then we come back again," he said. "We've always been lucky like that – I can't complain, it's a really good place to find ourselves."

For a troupe that can boast former members such as boogie-woogie bastion Jools Holland and serial hit-writer Paul Carrack, eventual recognition within the higher echelons of British musical greatness was surely inevitable.

And those to have jumped on the recent Squeeze appreciation society bandwagon number the likes of Lily Allen, Mark Ronson, Kasabian and The Feeling.

"I don't tend to brush shoulders with too many people like that, but it's really comforting to know your fans include those kinds of people. Our fans are all over the place and all kinds of people, so we're very lucky," said Difford.

The band's contribution to music has been noted, with the site of their first gig awarded a prestigious PRS For Music Heritage Plaque, something that has also commemorated the debuts of Blur and Dire Straits.

Since their original comeback in 2007, Squeeze have claimed an Ivor Novello for Outstanding Contribution To British Music and a Nordoff-Robbins Icon Award, as well as the Mojo Magazine Icon Award.

It is Difford's lyrics and Tilbrook's music that have kept the legend living on with hits like Tempted, Up The Junction and Cool For Cats. And the good news from Difford is that there could be more to come.

"There's quite a lot of new stuff. That's what we're battling with at the moment – how to fit it all into the set. It's going to be exciting for the audience to hear all these new songs, and that will be exciting for us."

The old creative process has returned for the duo, who have each had relatively successful solo careers away from the group.

"It has been very much like how it was and we have a handful of new songs that we're very proud of. [During the writing] there was no tension particularly, but it takes a while to get back into the swing of things and doing what you have always done. So it took some time, but now we're there and very pleased with it.

"There's a new album there, but I don't know when it's due or when it's planned for. We haven't really talked about next year, but I expect it to be in the first half of 2013."

Having reformed with Squeeze veteran John Bentley and Tilbrook's Fluffers cohorts Stephen Large and Simon Hanson, the band have become a favourite on the festival circuit, with appearances at V, Oxegen, T In The Park and Latitude – they received particularly great acclaim at the seminal US Festival Coachella.

But they have always had their own way of doing things, and their new tour, entitled The Pop Up Shop 2012 Winter Tour, is exactly what it says on the tin.

"The show is recorded every night and there are computers backstage and to burn CDs, up to 60 at a time. Then we go to the merchandise stand to sign them and meet people.

"It became an idea because it's a great way of selling our wares – there aren't many record shops left and we sell our own CDs. That way we can get to our fans quicker than waiting for the normal channels of record sales to go through. I think the audience will enjoy it."

Difford has fond memories from the countless Squeeze tours, but Kent – in particular the Leas Cliff Hall – holds a special place in his heart.

"There are quite a few gigs I loved, but I have very fond memories of Folkestone. I remember we played there once years ago and we were using dry ice and managed to fill the room. For some reason the dry ice wouldn't go away.

"We didn't have any fans or ventilation, so it was like that the whole gig. It was weird, it was like playing in a fog – no one could see us. We had to open all the doors to get rid of it – I don't think we'll be doing that again."

But don't worry – fans can expect all the old favourites alongside their new works.

"Up The Junction is one of the most favoured songs that always gets asked for and we deliver. Tempted is always fun because it's different most nights. That one is really good to play. We're lucky in the variation of the set, so we can swing it from side to side and change it up.

"All I'm doing right now is listening to Squeeze and trying to remember the chords."

Former Housemartin and Beautiful South frontman Paul Heaton will be supporting Squeeze on the 20-date tour, performing songs from his extensive back catalogue.

Budding gem on the edge of town is just waiting to burst into flower

RESTAURANT REVIEW

IF the hype is to be believed, the most wholesome, finest foods are leaping from the kitchens of what we perceive as classic restaurants and into the rising number of gastropubs.

After all, there is an informal charm to eating next to, or across the room from, a busy bar. You get a ready-made atmosphere and a sense that you're in the centre of a community.

But while every pub landlord knows that providing a solid food offering will swell its coffers in a challenging marketplace, it's too much to expect every drinking hole to suddenly be providing a menu worthy of the highest expectations.

Whitstable has more restaurants along its high street than it has tired old references to oysters. Pubs, on the other hand, have been a tad sluggish to embrace the food opportunity.

There's Richard Phillips's Pearson's Arms on the seafront, and that's pretty much it.

But venturing away from its heart offers up some options.

The Rose in Bloom pub enjoys one of the most beautiful settings in the town – with expansive views across the beach but set along Joy Lane on the edge of town.

A modern-looking pub, it boasts a conservatory with sea views that has been converted into a restaurant. With its wooden floors, heavy tables and modern décor, it could be a gem.

Instead, it's a run-of-the-mill diner that you cannot help think could do so much more.

Turning up for a Sunday lunch, the roast-beef-and-all-the-trimmings meal reeked of mere acceptability rather than anything that had had genuine love and attention poured into it.

The portions were generous, but the veg was not a million miles from being at home on a school dinner plate, and the beef was drenched in gravy to disguise run-of-the-mill cuts. At £8.95, this is not the cheap end of the market.

My partner had opted for the beer-battered cod with veg for the same price. The batter was light and tasty, but the cod was both over-cooked and tasteless. The chips were thick and fresh, however, and the highlight of the main course.

Desserts – raspberry cheesecake and chocolate cake – were both very rich but well presented and tasty, the chocolate cake gently heated to ensure the sauce was melt-in-the-mouth.

However, while the main course was not offensive, it wasn't up to scratch.

All of which was a real shame as the restaurant does pack a certain charm – it's a little like stepping back in time to restaurants that thought they were cutting edge... in the 80s.

But the pub is nice, and on a summer's day a glass of wine looking down over the sea is a life-enhancing experience.

The Rose in Bloom could, if it wanted to embrace more than just a modern image, become a real destination for the thousands who flood into Whitstable. Instead, it is merely OK. Which is no great criticism, and for £12.95 each for two courses and drinks on top, perhaps we should expect nothing more.

Giraffe stretches out to the Wintergarden

POPULAR family restaurant chain Giraffe has opened a new venue at the Wintergarden at Bluewater shopping centre.

The attractive floor-to-ceiling glass windows overlook the lake, making for a relaxed setting for adults, while the children can take a look at the 15ft giraffe adorned with classic Beano comics that stands tall in the centre of the eatery.

Open from breakfast through to dinner, the menu is crafted from fresh ingredients and there are dishes to suit every taste.

The Giraffe menu includes breakfasts, burgers, salads, desserts, Fairtrade coffee, smoothies and cocktails.

Ambrette: cheap eats and ready to compete

THE Ambrette restaurant in Margate has been named in the top 130 restaurants in the country at which to eat for less than £50.

The Sunday Times 'Cheap Eats' guide lists the venue as one of the 10 best in the South East and one of only three in Kent, the others being JoJo's in Whitstable and Café Mauresque in Canterbury.

Chef patron Dev Biswal said: "National recognition for The Ambrette is good news for the local Thanet economy – whenever we are featured in the national Press, we received bookings from gastro tourists from far and wide, many of whom take a mini break in the area."

Pop down to the pub to share in the adventures of Dolly Doodles

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

A SCRIPT-WRITER from Kent is launching her new children's book next week, bringing to life the world of iDoo-B-Doo.

Sammie Luck has created the series of tales, entitled Dolly Doodles And Her Adventures In Muddle-Puddle, alongside renowned author Ann Bryant and illustrator Mike Spoor, both based in Kent themselves.

The public will get their first taste of the new series at a book-reading and signing at The Five Bells pub in East Brabourne on Friday (November 30).

Having studied at Central St Martin as a script-writer almost 10 years ago, Luck was looking to create a children's book.

Several months later, with a word count of some 8,000, the writer made the decision to call in the experts and approached Bryant, one of her favourite children's authors.

Luck, 45, from Ashford said: "I was pleased with what I had written, including all the funny little villages like Muddle-Puddle, Grumbleweed Grove and Rosy Bay, and I was also having a great time creating all the characters and the original storyline, but the script just looked and read way too much like a film script.

"It simply had too much dialogue and not enough action. Writing books is a different format to script-writing, and children's books are an even harder task as there is so much to think about, so I knew I needed to call in the experts."

WRITER: Sammie Luck and her new book

Bryant agreed to get onboard with the project and persuaded Luck to turn the one big book into a series of smaller books aimed specifically at four- to eight-year-olds.

"I also knew the project needed to be visually very strong. Beautiful but lots of fun at the same time and a little quirky, too, so I hunted high and low for the right illustrator and approached top artists all over Europe before stumbling upon the very talented illustrator Mike Spoor, who, strangely enough, only lived and worked a few miles away.

It took us six weeks to develop the two main characters, Dolly Doodles and Tinkaboo. With me constantly hovering over poor Mike's shoulder but with his kind nature and patience, almost a year later the land of iDoo-B-Doo was born."

The concept, the characters and their storylines have been created and designed to help children believe in themselves and encourage them to believe in their hopes, dreams and wishes, too.

The first reading of the book starts at 4pm and lasts for 20 minutes; the second reading is at 5pm. Email info@idoobdoo.com for more information and to reserve a place at the launch.

Historic home is a seasonal treat

YOU can head behind the scenes at beautiful Penshurst Place this winter with a tour of the magnificent house.

The Penshurst housekeeper will tell you how the state rooms are cleaned and conserved during the winter months, before a full tour of the estate for £15 per person; there is a minimum group size of 15.

Visitors can enjoy some Christmas shopping in the gift shop, which is open daily, including Christmas Eve. Gifts on offer include mistletoe, Christmas trees and hampers full of Kent and Sussex produce.

Parking is free and there is complimentary coffee and a mince pie.

You could also visit the award-winning Penshurst farmers' market on Saturday, December 1, from 9.30am to midday.

Late-night shopping until 8pm will take place on November 30 and December 5, 12, and 19.

You will find 10 per cent off all purchases made on late-night evenings in the gift shop (excluding tickets, stamps and vouchers).

Why not step through the garden gates into Father Christmas's magical grotto on weekends throughout December from 10.30am to 12.30pm and 1.30pm to 3.30pm? Tickets are priced at £5 and no booking is required.

Should snow descend on the weekends, however, do ring 01892 871256 to confirm that Father Christmas has arrived safely.

Phone the head of visitor services on 01892 870307 or email groups@penshurstplace.com to find out more about making a winter trip to Penshurst Place.

Rapid makes it a magnificent seven for the Skoda portfolio

HERITAGE means pride and pressure at Skoda.

The Czech marque loves model names from its pre-war heyday, so the range flagship is the Superb – it's good, especially for the money, but perhaps a little short of superb.

Now we have the Rapid, but unfortunately it's not. And Skoda has previous on this one, applying the same name to a coupé based on the dreadful Estelle – one of the final models of Skoda's Iron Curtain era before VW took over.

That wasn't Rapid, either.

Still, putting trade-description discrepancy to one side, the new Rapid becomes Skoda's seventh model and marks a reconstruction of its range that also involves the Octavia – the car that started the modern-day Skoda revival.

The Octavia has long been a little too big for the family hatchback or Focus/Golf sector but too small for the fleet/family car Mondeo/Insignia sector.

So the next-generation car will grow to attack Mondeo and Co, leaving space for the Rapid.

In so many ways it is the new Octavia and fans will recognise all the traits of their old favourite: value with quality plus dependability and customer satisfaction.

With its Audi-esque crisp shoulder line and what is expected to become the new Skoda corporate nose, it also looks upmarket for a car starting at just £12,900, though you need at least £14,650 to get air-con and alloys as standard.

Thoughts of Audi are dispelled, though, by a robust but simply functional cabin. However, it's vast for the size of the car and allows the Rapid to carry adults front and back with plenty of leg and headroom.

It's also versatile with that upmarket saloon silhouette disguising a hatchback; the tailgate is not a clever two-part job like the Superb's, but a simple tailgate that opens to 550 litres with seats up and 1,490 with seats down – the latter figure makes some estate cars in the segment look sad.

The Rapid is offered with four petrol engines and one diesel, underlining Skoda's view that most demand will come from savvy private-car-buyers.

Based on a head-to-head between the 104bhp 1.6TDI diesel and 85bhp 1.2TSI turbocharged petrol models I drove, I would certainly take the latter. Not only does the diesel engine add almost £2,000 to the price, but it's also not much better on fuel and CO_2 emissions – you would need to cover many miles to claw back that extra two grand in better fuel economy.

Its weight also dulls the car's responsiveness, not that the Rapid purports to be a driver's car; the chassis is biased towards comfort and Skoda's marketing people were adamant there will be no vRS sporting model to glam up the range.

That sub-branding that will be reserved for the next Octavia.

DON'T LIKE

... the regimented look of the interior, but you cannot fault its functionality and the likelihood that everything will work for years to come.

NOT SURE

... it can stand out enough in a crowd, but Skoda's excellent record on customer satisfaction, plus the price, should mean rapid sales at least.

REALLY LIKE

... the honesty of the car and how it has been presented. Apart from the contradictory name, it does what you expect it to do for the money.

Eco Rio shows Kia's ambition

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

CALLING a car the 'Rio' might suggest some Latin American swagger, but the first two Kia Rio generations lacked the essence of bustling Rio de Janeiro.

Then again, it's probably optimistic to suggest that any supermini can assail the senses like the city of carnival and Copacabana Beach.

But the leap in style and attraction shown by generation-three Rio does at least highlight Kia's ambition – the sort of audacity that has made an economic powerhouse out of Brazil's second city.

Launched last year, the latest Rio relies less on Kia's old value-for-money pitch – including its unique seven-year/100,000-mile Kia warranty – and more on the kind of technology, quality and dynamics that are the stock-in-trade of Western rivals like the Ford Fiesta, VW Polo and Vauxhall Corsa.

And the latest Rio is good-looking, too; more proof after Kia's latest eye-catching Sportage SUV that former Audi design ace Peter Schreyer – the man who created the original TT – is at the helm.

And there's a Rio version that's also one of the most eco-friendly cars on the market.

It's the 1.1-litre diesel tested here and available from £12,095 in three-door form, though ours was the £13,795 mid-spec Rio 2 five-door – five-door variants command a £600 premium over their less practical but sportier-looking three-door equivalents.

In our car the 1.1 diesel offers 74.3mpg on the combined cycle and exemption from road tax due to CO_2 emissions of just 99g/km, helped by Kia's Intelligent Stop & Go (ISG) system for best economy during city driving or motorway hold-ups – part of the fuel/emissions-saving 'Ecodynamics' system that is standard on all Rio diesels.

Admittedly, choosing a three-cylinder format for a diesel was always going to be a challenge to refinement, but the little 74bhp unit settles well for steady cruising, helped by a six-speed gearbox.

KIA RIO 2 1.1 CRDI 5-DR ISG: PRICE £13,795

BETTER BY DESIGN: Kia's new Rio may lack some of the sparkle of the city after which it is named, but it comes with a version that's one of the most eco-friendly on the market

It's never zesty, though, so urban users must ask whether they really do want this version's out-and-out economy, or a bit more welly for cut-and-thrust town traffic – there are 1.4-litre petrol and diesel options, plus a dreary 1.25-litre entry-level petrol, and all will out-accelerate the 1.1's modest 0-60mph in 14.9 seconds.

Whatever the engine choice, though, you get lots of car for your money; though the previous and rather chunky Rio looked like it belonged to the car sector above supermini, its replacement is longer and wider yet appears smaller.

This optical illusion has been achieved by low and rakish coupé-styling, which doesn't actually impinge on interior space because Kia engineers and designers have inserted a 70mm stretch to the wheelbase when compared with the previous Rio, while the base of the steeply-raked screen sits a whopping 156mm further forward than before.

So adults get great legroom front and back, even if the enlarged boot is still only average for the class, while the interior is sensibly organised with decent stowage space.

The durability of the fixtures and fittings is clear even if quality is still a little off the pace in places, but you can only applaud the strides made by Kia in just 10 years.

As ever with Kia, the kit is generous, with the test car coming with air-con, alloys, electric folding/heated/adjusting door mirrors, leather-trimmed wheel and gearknob, electric windows all round, plus Bluetooth hands-free phone and USB/Aux connectivity

Driver feedback is less relevant in this eco version and the slightly vague Rio steering won't worry anyone not bothered about pressing on, though the chassis has good poise when pushed while still delivering good ride quality, so it's worth checking out the other engine options

Suzy quattro's face for 2013

WINTER'S here and some drivers may be turning their minds to buying a 4x4.

And they don't combine cheapness and ability better than Suzuki's compact Jimny (from £11,995).

It's been refreshed for 2013, too, with new front-bumper and grille, new seat fabric for the SZ3 entry model, new headrests and Isofix child seat mountings fitted as standard to the rear seats.

Mini is upping the pace, man

BMW'S Mini arm lifts its model line-up to seven next March with a sporty three-door yet versatile coupé version of the Countryman SUV brand flagship.

The Paceman (from £18,970) shares the same nose and will be available with front-whee-drive or 4x4 but is lower and has a more horizontal theme to the back end, which lowers the car visually.

Big sales for Ford mini MPV

FORD'S B-Max baby MPV (from £12,995) sold an astonishing 1,000 units in its first six weeks on sale.

The car's big feature is the missing 'B' pillars between its doors, strengthened to cope with a collision and, when open, creating a 1.5-metre unobstructed opening – highlighted in a Ford TV ad showing a high diver passing through the car before hitting the water.

Key's looking forward to bright future after seven years in the Kent hot seat

TIRED: Rob Key has stepped aside to concentrate on his own performance after seven years

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

ROB Key marked the end of an era after stepping aside as Kent captain this week, but admitted he's excited for the future with team-mate James Tredwell at the helm.

Key, who had been in charge for seven years - the longest of any current serving county captain - said he felt worn out having seen Kent through a tough period in its history.

The 33-year-old revealed he had thought about passing the captaincy on earlier in his career, but felt it wasn't the right time with the club going through difficult periods in the recession. Now, with things on a more even keel on the pitch under head coach Jimmy Adams, he felt comfortable to step aside.

"I care passionately about where it (the club) goes," he said. "Now is not a bad time to hand it over to someone. Every year you think 'am I prepared to do this all again?'. Ultimately I didn't think it was fair for other people to do it."

Key took over from Dave Fulton for the 2006 season and set about making the county a force in the one-day game under the guidance of director of cricket Graham Ford. Success followed as they clinched the Twenty20 cup in his second season, but they suffered the disappointment of losing two finals, firstly the T20 and then the Friends Provident Trophy in 2008.

But personally Key never hit the heights with the bat as he had done before taking over, which played a part in his decision to stand down.

"At the end of the summer I was tired and had had enough really," he said. "I wanted to concentrate on my own game and myself. I had a couple of months of thinking. I came to the conclusion and didn't really change that.

"Every time I look forward I feel excited now. I don't have to worry about being the captain or coping with being the captain or what's happening with the players. I've never been as successful as a player before I took the job on as a captain. It's more about trying to go back to winning games. Hopefully I can keep going and have the best part of my career. I never want to see cricket as a job, and when I do that's when I should finish. I can't think of doing anything else really.

"It was purely about looking forward to being a player. I have always tried to keep a sense of perspective about what I do. Professional sportsmen sometimes miss that and they sometimes think they are more important than they are."

Kent came agonizingly close to promotion back into the top tier of the County Championship in what proved to be his last season in charge, as the promotion race went to the final game. But even promotion wouldn't have affected his decision, he said.

No cup throwing or brash team talks, says Tredwell

NEW Kent captain James Tredwell is hoping to lead by example in a role he admits is a daunting one.

The 30-year-old spinner has experience of leading sides throughout his career, but being given the captaincy of his home county was a shock for the England man.

He's led Kent's second side as well as England A, and England under-19s on one occasion earlier in his career.

He's also proved to be the perfect soundboard on the pitch for his predecessor Rob Key at times, which is a comfort for Tredwell as he heads into a new chapter of his Kent career.

"It's (the captaincy) something I have maybe looked towards coming to this part of my career," he said. "It's not really sunk in yet. I've not dug my teeth into any part of the role, but as we go into this week and next and go into meetings I well get that. I will be pinching myself regularly.

"I just think at this point in my career, this is the next step. Having played a few England games I want that to continue. For me to develop not only as a player but as a person; this is huge for me.

"Taking on this role can enhance my game, and the added responsibility and leading by example is going to be a big thing for me on the field.

"I like to think if I haven't got their (the players) respect I will gain it. I don't think I will be throwing tea cups around, that's not me. It will be a quiet arm round the shoulder or a boot up the backside. It won't be big brash team talks. It's a role I will grow into. I will lean on other people to figure out the best way around it."

Key has often sought the advice of Tredwell on the field in the last few years, and it's a partnership which looks set to continue now the roles have reversed.

"Obviously he's (Rob Key) an experienced man and knows what the role is," said Tredwell. "I'm going to need to rack his brains to help me on my way.

"I've quite enjoyed that (giving advice) the last couple of years. He's made that more evident that he wanted my opinion.

"It's great having the belief from the people that make the decisions that I can do it. If someone believes in you, you can believe in yourself and hopefully I can do them proud."

He's hoping to make the most of the different styles of captaincy he's experienced throughout his career at Kent.

"There's great traditions at the club with former captains Matt Fleming, Dave Fulton and Rob (Key)," he said. "I will use a lot of what they used in their tenure. I think it would be silly not to use the better parts of their captaincy and bring in my own style."

ADVICE: Tredwell to use Key

Fundraising campaign is launched to rebuild stand

A MULTI-MILLION pound fundraising campaign has been launched by Kent County Cricket Club to raise funds to rebuild one of the most recognisable parts of its home ground.

The club wants to construct a new Frank Woolley Stand – replacing the existing stand – at its St Lawrence Ground in Canterbury.

The original stand was constructed in 1927, and despite a renovation in 1972, the club says it is not at the standard of the rest of the redeveloped ground.

The club has spent the last few months looking at the best way forward for the project, which could have either seen it given a lick of paint or complete rebuild, and the county as opted for the latter.

The intention is to raise around £4 million to fund a new, modern stand which is fit for purpose and will form a key part of the newly redeveloped St Lawrence Ground.

Kent Cricket chairman George Kennedy urged members and supporters to get behind the project. He said: "The redevelopment of the St Lawrence Ground is now nearing completion and has brought the St Lawrence Ground up to date.

"It has become apparent that we also need to address the state of the Frank Woolley Stand following the vast improvements to our other facilities.

"We will launch our Woolley Appeal at a special event on January 17. I do hope that many Kent Cricket members and supporters will join us as we get this significant project underway."

Former England international and club captain Matthew Fleming has been appointed patron of the appeal.

Fulton salutes outgoing skipper, but backs new man at helm

FORMER Kent captain Dave Fulton has paid tribute to old team-mate Rob Key, calling him a brilliant leader.

Fulton resigned in 2005, opening the door for Key to take over for the 2006 season, which proved to be Fulton's last year at the county.

Since then Key has led Kent through an unstable period in its history with relegation from the top tier of the County Championship, the recession and the Twenty20 cup success in 2007.

There were also the two finals the following year again in the T20, and in the Friends Provident Trophy, which both ended in defeat.

Fulton, who now works in the media, was full of praise for Key's leadership, particularly in the short form of the game, as Key and former director of cricket Graham Ford found a winning formula.

"I only played under Keysey (Rob Key) for a year when I was on my way out," he said. "He's been tactically very astute, he's got a sharp cricketing brain and he's not afraid of trying new things at times.

"The most important thing he's done, which not a lot of captains have done in recent times, is he's won silverware with the T20 success.

"He and Graham Ford masterminded that. They found a formula that worked. In terms of where he's taken the squad and his leading by example he's been brilliant."

Fulton also knows that while Key's successor Tredwell is a different character, he can also be a success at the St Lawrence Ground.

"He has leadership experience," he said. "He's quieter, but no less respected. He's very well respected and liked in the England set-up. He just gets on with the job. That's an overlooked and underestimated quality.

"It's not all about clapping your hands and encouraging people on the field. Sometimes it's about getting the job done."

MyFC ownership has run its course, say fans' group

By Greg Miles

SERIOUS questions have been raised about Ebbsfleet United's future under the ownership of My-Football Club.

It's feared the MyFootball Club company, an internet venture made up of members paying annual subscriptions, will not be able to support the club in the long-term as its lack of members leaves Ebbsfleet's bank balance in a precarious position.

The lack of members is not a new problem for the group, which owns 75 per cent of the club, but it has now got to the stage where fans' group, The Fleet Trust, feels a decision needs to be made on the club's long term future.

Vice chair of the trust Emily Connolly feels while the fans-owned venture may have worked when backed by more than 30,000 members when it took over in 2008, it can no longer be sustained with a current membership of 1,200 or so.

"Last season we muddled along and collected money in buckets at games to get ourselves through the season," she said. "MyFC has put a lot of money in, but I guess it's run its course.

"Enough is enough, we can't keep living hand to mouth. It's not about the short-term, but about the long-term.

"The question we are asking is: are they prepared to part with their shares? Do we find someone to take on their shares? Or do we form a better supporters' trust to run it?

"Maybe we can work with them to help find investment. It's never been our aim to run the football club, but if there's support for that then we need to look at it."

CASH: Money is tight for Fleet boss Liam Daish

The trust is constantly fundraising to support the club, and last week handed over £9,000 to go towards players' wages, while also putting another £2,000 towards stock for the club shop. Ebbsfleet chairman Jessica McQueen feels a decision needs to be made. "It's no secret that the number of members are dwindling," she said. "It's come to a stage now where they (MyFC) have to make a decision about the long term future.

"We don't want to stay where we are, we want to grow and become a full-time club. We want to give our manager Liam (Daish) every opportunity to do that. We cannot do that, with all due respect, if we are having to keep running to just stand still.

"MyFC had 35,000 members when they took over, and now have something like 1,200. You don't have to be a mathematician to understand the money is not forthcoming."

Chairman of MyFC Keith Handley said they were willing to work with anybody who is interested in offering financial support.

"I don't know if there is anybody out there who wants to get involved," he said. "We are happy to work with anybody.

"If they can bring somebody forward that has got a detailed business plan who could do a good job as owners, members would happily read it. We are reasonable people."

He was keen to stress there is a natural lull in income at certain points in the season. In Febuary they expect a cash injection when 700 members are set for renewal.

The Fleet Trust is holding its AGM on Thursday this week and the group has urged members to attend to discuss the situation.

Lessons learnt in classroom benefitting TJs on the pitch

TONBRIDGE Juddians coach Ben Smith is hoping the club can reap the benefits of taking a more analytical approach to training.

Instead of spending hours on the training pitch drilling players, Smith is spending more time in the classroom where he, his coaching staff and players are going through video footage of their performances.

It's not a new practice for the National League 3 London & SE club, but this season - the first he's been in charge of first team affairs - he's involved players in reviewing the footage. It removes the need for him and his fellow coaches to repeat the same messages in training time and again.

"The other day we had 40 minutes of physical training and the focus was so tight because they all knew what they had done wrong from previous weeks because of the video," he said.

"The concentration was a massive factor. It's a powerful tool to use. There's a reason why the top teams do it."

The proof as they say, is in the pudding, and TJs are keeping up with the leading pack in their division, which this year includes several stronger sides who have dropped down because of league restructuring.

VIDEO: TJs review performances

They've lost just twice so far this term and both were to the top two teams, first placed Barnes and second placed Dorking, while drawing with third place Bishops Stortford. They lie comfortably in fourth just 10 points off the leaders. They take a break from league action next weekend before taking on Old Elthamians at home on December 8th.

Sevenoaks challenged to adapt without star player

SEVENOAKS manager Christine Crosley admits injury to star player Lucy Wood has taken the shine off their superb first half of the season.

The ladies' first team have been a force in the Conference East this term, leading the table until a loss against second placed Harleston Magpies last weekend which saw them switch places.

They go into the winter break in a good position to mount a challenge for the title, but will have to do so without forward Lucy Wood, who will be out for the season after suffering a serious knee injury. However, Crosley is optimistic her squad can overcome that challenge and still be in the hunt for silverware due to the availability of players improving in the second half of the season with the change over in school sports from hockey to netball.

She said: "We have got some very talented forwards and they will have to adapt. It's just another thing to overcome. Lucy is a very talented played so that is definitely a loss.

"We fortunately had a very good run after having poor availability in the first part of the season. We had players on international duty and school duty. But we managed to put a string of results together.

"You always want to finish the first part of the season off having played well, and we will be at least second."

THANKS: Mikel Suarez hails fantastic support

Angels striker thanks fans for helping him through serious injury

RECOVERING Tonbridge Angels striker Mikel Suarez has issued a heart-felt thanks to fans for their support following his spell in hospital after suffering a serious head injury.

The 27-year-old Spaniard clashed heads with Lee Browning against Farnborough last month and spent more than a week in hospital in a coma. Messages from well-wishers flooded in from across the non-league football scene as he recovered in intensive care.

Following his return home, he released a statement of thanks through the club and said he hopes to return to playing in the middle of next year for the Blue Square South side.

"I want to thank everyone for the fantastic support and kind messages I and my family have received since my unfortunate accident in the match against Farnborough FC in October," he said. "These have been transmitted to me and have sincerely helped me in remaining positive during my recovery.

"My family have asked me to especially thank Tonbridge Angels FC, all the management, Tina, players, staff and fans since they have made this difficult period as tolerable as possible.

"I would also like to thank my ex-Lougborough University FC team-mates and staff, and all the clubs and fans who have messaged both the club and myself wishing me a speedy recovery; it is very much appreciated.

"It's moments like these that bring out the humanity in people in a sport as competitive as football, and puts things into perspective.

"I am still in the process of recovering, however I hope to be back up and running early to mid next year. Thanks everyone once again and I look forward to being back on the pitch."

Angels boss Warrilow was glad to hear of his recovery. He said: "He's looking towards the middle of next year to get back playing again.

"It's nice to hear he's got those thoughts in his mind. It's a case of him coming back next pre-season and see what happens. For him it must be frustrating because he's a fit lad."

On the pitch, Warrilow is happy to see confidence building in his side following their 1-1 draw against Hayes & Yeading last Saturday.

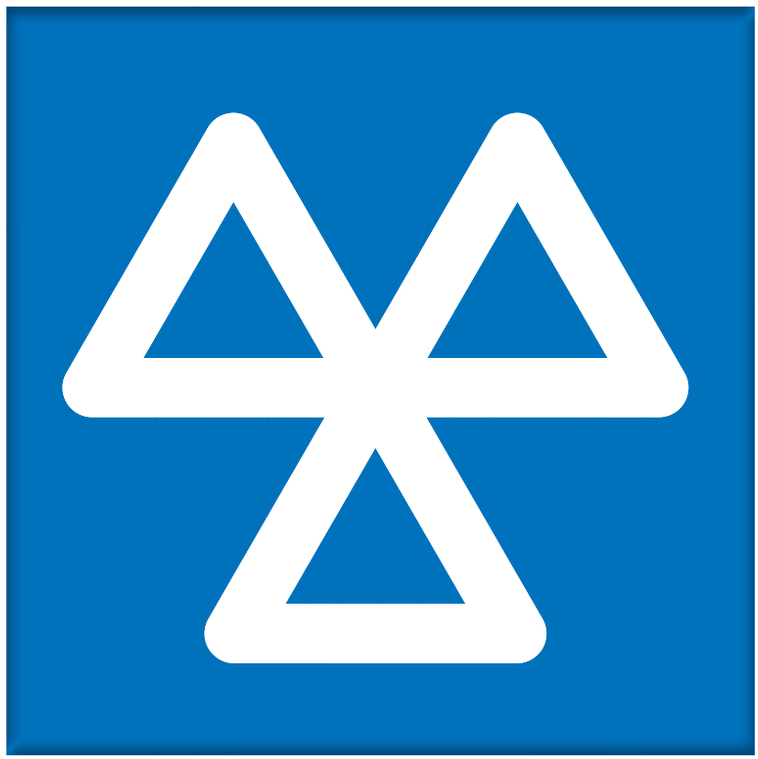

"We have only lost four games in 18 matches," he said. "We have had some good performances, and we've had some where we had to dig in. There's no reason for the boys not to believe in themselves."
